Plans have been perfected to make the pre-release showing of the picture at the Globe theatre in Boston next Monday evening, October 2, another gala occasion. Miss Young will visit Boston to appear before her opening audiences and arrangements for her entertainment by civic and official society have been made.

The regular release date for the picture will be October 16, and so great has been the demand for first showings that the Selznick organization has been forced to make 100 prints.

To present all the vital elements of a drama of war without a shot being fired is the unique idea which Herbert Brenon has evolved for his production of Marion Craig Wentworth's play, "War Brides," in which Nazimova will make her first appearance on the moving picture screen early in November. He decided to avoid the depiction of actual combat because he believes that too many spectacular episodes detract from the story, and in "War Brides" the personal drama is so intense in character that he does not want anything to intrude upon it. Therefore he will create a war picture without picturing war.

Only a few more secnes of this picture remain to be made, and then the work of assembling will begin. The release date has not been set, but it will be early in November.

Work on the first production of the Kitty Gordon Film Corporation, the latest of the producing companies organized to provide film features for Selznick-Pictures, is progressing.

The subject chosen for the first of Miss Gordon's new ventures is "Vera, the Medium," by the late Richard Harding Davis. In "Vera, the Medium," Miss Gordon essays a role that affords her every opportunity to make the most of her beauty as well as to adorn herself in a bewildering array of startling costumes.

The plot of the story in one of mystery and venture, and is produced under the supervision of G. M. Anderson, the "Broncho Billy" of Essanay fame.

Miss Gordon's career has been as spectacular as her beauty. Beginning in the London music halls she quickly won the attention of the critical public, and became one of the most popular musical stars in that country.

World Film, Hale and Hearty, Reaches Second Birthday

Thursday, September 21, Was the Anniversary, But, Alas! Pressure of Business Was So Great That It Was Overlooked

THE World Film Corporation is two years of age. The second anniversary of its initial release occurred on Thursday, September 21, but everybody was too busy to pay any attention to the fact, and for the moment it slipped by unnoticed. There was no celebration, no birthday cake with two candles stuck to the frosted crust, no indication of any kind that the day differed from others in the increasing of World Film activities.

Yet the arrival of such an occasion must have been in the nature of a surprise to a considerable number of persons who had viewed some portions of the infancy of this now decidedly husky and vigorous youngster. For there had been moments when the baby wobbled somewhat in its attempts to stand up, and its little tummy ached dreadfully, and its digestion cut up distressing antics.

These were matters such as make their appearance in every family, well regulated or otherwise, and the World kiddie was fortunate enough to outgrow them in their very beginning, so that at a point of development where most human struggles are severest, this lusty youth finds life serene and rosy and every prospect a new allurement.

"To carry out the details of the picture," said William A. Brady, director general, "I might say the World two-year-old is nourished with the very cream of exhibitors' patronage from every quarter, that the young one is soothed by the music of praise arising from great numbers of delighted associates; and that for playthings such as never have been enjoyed by any other child of whatever age or parentage, the World possesses completed releases five months in advance.

"If I may borrow one of the idioms of the newspaper headlines, the World Film is the millionaire kid. But there was no inheritance back of this. The possessions of the corporation were assembled by hard work along carefully drawn lines. I do not claim any special credit for what has been accomplished. Nothing could have been done without cooperation of the sort that exists in this concern. Team work is the idea.

"For months before I took hold of the task of pulling the business together I had been on the board of directors and in a position to see that the concern had reached a point where it would either go backward or forward.

"I never had a moment's doubt as to the outcome, and neither did my associates. We all started pushing, and kept on pushing, and the ball began to roll—not much at first, but enough to show us we had budged it. That was the hardest part of it—the first move.

"Then, after the momentum had reached a satisfactory stage, came the task of control—and this also was overcome. At present we have a big machine that moves as smoothly as a Tiffany watch. It produces our pictures on the minute and distributes and advertises them without the loss of a second.

"All this is worth being proud of, but to me the biggest accomplishment of the lot is the one that is the very foundation—the recognition that World Pictures have grown better and better with every release. Yes, I certainly take pride in the achievements of the two-year-old World Film."

Frohman and Abrams Exchange Congratulations on "Embers"

They Both Declare That the Work of Pauline Frederick in Her Latest Vehicle for Famous Players Makes One of the Most Notable Pictures They Have Ever Seen

DANIEL FROHMAN, managing director of the Famous Players Film Company, and Hiram Abrams, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, both declare that Pauline Frederick in "Ashes of Embers" is one of the most notable dramatic photoplays either has ever seen. This opinion is revealed in a letter sent to Mr. Frohman by Hiram Abrams after he had seen the initial projection of "Ashes of Embers" at the William L. Sherry offices and in the acknowledgment of his letter by Daniel Frohman. The letters follow:

September 21, 1916.

Mr. Daniel Frohman, Managing Director,
Famous Players Film Co.,
485 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Frohman:

I have just seen the Famous Players' current production, "Ashes of Embers" and I hasten to congratulate your company upon accomplishing this great dramatic screen masterpiece.

Miss Frederick's remarkable portrayal of the two sisters of distinctly different personalities is undoubtedly the greatest double characterization and the most amazing demonstration of emotional art ever contributed to the screen.

I am confident this production will be received by the photoplay public as one of the foremost evidences of the great photoplay art that has been developed under the careful guidance of such companies as yours.

Very truly yours,
Hiram Abrams,
President Paramount Pictures Corporation.

September 22, 1916.

Mr. Hiram Abrams,
Paramount Pictures Corporation,
485 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.

My dear Sir:

I wish to acknowledge with sincere thanks, on behalf of the Famous Players Film Company, your kind letttr of commendation regarding our current production, "Ashes of Embers," starring Pauline Frederick in the dual role of two sisters.

I agree with you that Miss Frederick attains dramatic heights in this production unequaled by any of her former photoplay achievements, notable as they have been, and that this production establishes her even more securely than before, as the foremost emotional artist on the screen.

It is very gratifying to me to have, from such a film authority as yourself, this great compliment to the work of one of our artists and the company as a whole. Mr. Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, joins me in my appreciation of your recognition of the merits of this subject, and my elation over the progress that this company has made from its inception, which has made possible the creation of such productions as "Ashes of Embers." It is also pleasing to know that through the comprehensive system of Paramount distribution, many millions of the photoplay public will be permitted to view this extraordinary dual characterization.

I need not assure you that it is our earnest desire to continue to produce subjects of an equal or greater merit.

Very truly yours,
Daniel Frohman.

Predicts 50 Boston Theatres Will Run "Shielding Shadow"

Farrell, Exchange Manager, Reports Serial and All Gold Roosters Taken by Boston Theatre Advance Bookings Greater Than on Any Other Serial

E. J. FARRELL, the new manager of the Boston office has started to put into execution his campaign for efficiency in service to New England exhibitors.

Just one week after receipt of a letter from C. R. Seelye, business manager of the Pathe Company, outlining the broad, general policy, according to which all Pathe exchanges work, Mr. Farrell informs the home office that with the co-operation of his organization, he had booked "The Shielding Shadow," and all Gold Rooster Plays, beginning with "The Test," into the 4,000 seat Boston theatre. He states further that at least fifty houses in Boston, will run "The Shielding Shadow."

In Springfield, he has booked all Gold Rooster plays to Fox's theatre, and "The Shielding Shadow," first run to the big Broadway theatre. He reports that by the middle of the week, he will have Portland and Providence first runs.

He has also closed New Britain for The Shielding Shadow," Gold Rooster plays, and single-reel service and expects to close Portland, Worcester, Manchester, Lowell, Portsmouth, Bangor and Augusta, immediately.

Further indication of the activity of Pathe's Boston office, is seen in the fact that during the past week, Mr. Farrell's organization had "The Shine Girl" running in the Park theatre for seven days, another Gold Rooster play in the 4,000 seat Boston theatre for six days and still another in Loew's Orpheum theatre for three days.

The advance bookings on "The Shielding Shadow" in the Boston territory are larger than on any Pathe serial ever released.

Under a two-column headline, characterizing him as one of the highest paid and best men in the industry, the Boston Globe recently carried a lengthy article concerning Farrell and his staff.

Urban Tells How "Battle of the Somme" Was Obtained

Cameramen Had to Have Lieutenants' Commissions to Take Their Cameras into the Front Trenches; Tripods Were Shot from Under Them—Film Warmly Welcomed in England—"How Britain Prepared" Will Follow in Three Sections: "Jellicoe's Fleet," "Kitchener's Army" and "The Munition Workers"

A PRIVATE showing of "The Battle of the Somme," the official picture of the British War Department showing the commencement of the allied offensive of July 1 was held Friday night of last week under the personal direction of Charles Urban.

This picture has created somewhat of a sensation in England. It shows in all of its brutal reality the actual conditions as they exist in the first line trenches. Charles Urban, who has been officially appointed by the British War Office to show the picture in all countries outside of England, said when seen by a representative of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

"This is the first of the many so-called war pictures that was actually taken at the front, from the most advanced position of the allied army. The two photographers risked their lives in the most gallant and courageous manner. Several times the tripod was shot from under the camera and one of them received a bullet through the top of his cap.

Cameramen Had Lieutenants' Commissions

"In order to get the pictures these two men had to first join the army. They were given commissions as lieutenants and were thus enabled to get in the very front of the action. The picture was taken with the official sanction of the War Office, in fact it was really the official government picture of the army in action. It was taken under the direct supervision of what is known as the British Topical Committee for War Films, consisting of seven manufacturers of motion pictures in England appointed by the manufacturers' association.

"Though the picture caused some adverse comment when it was shown to the British public, on account of the vivid reality of the various scenes, it has met with a nation-wide enthusiastic reception. It has been booked in every town and village in the British Isles. In England fifty per cent. of the gross receipts, wherever the picture is shown, go direct to the war department, and in foreign countries it pays a heavy royalty, which goes to the same place.

"It was first planned to put out this collection as a series of single reel offerings, but after I had seen the first print I persuaded the War Office to combine it all and let it go out as a five-reel feature. This it finally did and the picture was edited, cut and assembled under my direct supervision.

Premier and Cabinet Saw Film

"When the edited and assembled picture was completed I gave a private showing in one of my smaller London houses to Premier Asquith and the members of the cabinet. The place was crowded to the doors. It is fortunate that there was not a Zeppelin raid at that time, for if a bomb had been dropped on the theatre it would have wiped out the whole government.

"At the conclusion of the showing even these men, who are in direct touch with the trend of events, who are intimately familiar with conditions as they are at the front, were made to realize even more keenly than they had before the awful horribleness of modern warfare.

"It is because of this great reality in the pictures that the government after much consideration decided that they would permit the public to view them, believing that it would drive home as no other agency could the realization of just what this war means to England and the civilized world. One of the principal reasons for their arrival at this conclusion was the fact that it wanted the thousands of workers in the munitions factories to appreciate as keenly as possible the absolute dependence of the boys in the trenches upon a constant and ever increasing supply of guns and ammunition.

"I feel that in showing this picture to the American people that I am performing a service of direct benefit in permitting them to view actual war conditions as they really exist, and to drive home as forcibly as possible the real meaning to the civilized world of just what this war means.

"Almost co-incident with the release of "The Battle of the Somme," I shall make arrangements to release at the same time the pictures which were shown in New York last Spring under the title of "How Britain Prepared." These pictures have never been shown throughout the country and they will now be put out in three divisions: "Jellicoe's Fleet," "Kitchener's Army," and the extensive pictures showing the thousands of munitions workers in the factories turning out guns and shells.

"All of these pictures were made and prepared by me, production, direction, and presentation. They are actual and real in every detail. There is not a single scene in them that was rehearsed before hand, each and every one was taken as a part of the actual work of the various units. These will be put out in serial form, and will be released in this country through The Patriot Film Corporation, of 729 Seventh avenue."

Relative to these pictures Mr. Urban has a most interesting collection of letters from practically all of the prominent government officials at Washington in fulsome praise of their realistic truth, and their worth as a means of arousing a spirit of national preparedness in this country.

Standard Film Industries, Inc., Launched in Virginia—First Move Is to Take Over American Film Laboratories

THE Standard Film Industries, Inc., is the latest motion picture company to be organized. It has been incorporated under the laws of Virginia for a total capitalization of $10,000,000. The president of the new concern is Louis B. Jennings, president of the American Film Laboratories. Among the other directors are Anthony J. Drexel, Philip O. Mills, who will also be secretary and treasurer, and George J. Hurty.

Mr. Jennings, in speaking with a representative of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS relative to the new corporation, said: "Besides the names mentioned there are other very strong financial and film interests associated with the new company, making the personal of the new organization very high.

"One of the first moves of the new concern will be to take over the American Film Laboratories. It has also arranged for a complete system of distribution throughout the United States, comprising twenty independent exchanges in the most important cities in the country. It is our intention to handle the product of outside manufacturers, licensing them to release through us, but only if they can produce a quality comparable to the standard which we shall demand.

"The policy of the new company will be to carry on its business along very conservative lines. There will be no high salaries. After its initial cash capital is paid in $8,250,000 will remain in the treasury for the purpose of purchasng outright other film companies, who have something definite and tangible to sell other than a name and a more or less inflated reputation. Nothing will be purchased, however, which does not possess real value and tangible visible assets.

"It is not the expectation of the interests behind this new deal to make a fortune overnight. They will be satisfied with a fair return on their investment, and will work for a steady consistent growth rather than for quick profits. The company will be managed by a Board of Governors, each of whom will be the head of one of the various departments. There will be a governor in charge of production, another in charge of distribution, another in charge of finance, and still another in charge of the technical departments. These will meet two or three times each week, and will work out plans and policies for the business as a whole.

"Every new deal entered into by the company will be investigated in a careful detailed manner before it is consummated. It is the intention of myself and associates to move very slowly and conservatively, to build on solid foundations and to erect a structure that will not only last, but will prosper. With the American Laboratories as a nucleus we believe that we can go on and expand and incorporate sound conservative methods into the film business."

The temporary offices are in the American film Laboratories Building.

"The Whip," Mammoth Spectacle, Is Picturized in Eight Reels

Biggest Production Ever Sent to This Country from Drury Lane Theatre and Produced Here by William A. Brady, Now Being Made by Maurice Tourneur

THE photoplay version of "The Whip," the biggest dramatic spectacle ever sent to this country from the Drury Lane theatre, London, will be in eight reels. The production is under Maurice Tourneur's direction and is being carried to completion in the Paragon studio at Fort Lee.

In all, three full months will have been expended upon the making of this picture.

For the racing scenes which form the climax of this story the entire company was taken by special train to Saratoga during the recent Jockey Club meeting at that famous resort lasting through the month of August.

One morning the Saratoga newspaper contained a large advertisement inviting visitors and residents to appear at the track at ten o'clock to take part in a great moving picture spectacle, and so many were attracted by the idea that the grandstand, paddock and lawns were fairly jammed with a jostling, good-natured holiday crowd—just what was wanted for this particular part of the play.

For the horse show episode which forms another important portion of the drama the members of the cast were transported en masse to Long Branch, where they were photographed as elements of the real horse show which is the great social event of the year with the summer visitors to that seashore colony. A great number of men and women prominent in American society also appeared in the picture.

The company chosen to play the principal parts in "The Whip" is made up in part of players who appeared in the original American cast during the two years' run of the spoken drama at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, and in part of actors and actresses who have already won distinction in the moving picture world.

The leading male role is in the hands of Irving Cummings, who at the moment is varying his activities in the studio by playing at night in the new comedy "Object, Matrimony," by Jules Eckert Goodman and Montague Glass, the latter being also the author of "Potash and Perlmutter."

In the "opposite" part in "The Whip" will be found Miss Alma Hanlon, an exceedingly gifted and attractive young actress who has gained high recognition in the theatre and upon the screen.

June Elvidge is to be the fascinating creature to whose wiles most of the complications of the narrative must be attributed.

Dion Titheradge, a young English actor, Paul McAllister, star of a number of successful stock companies, Alfred Hemming and Warren Cooke will interpret the remaining vitally important personages.

The production will be released early in November by The Whip Motion Pictures Co., Inc., Fort Lee, N. J.

The Producing Elements of the Art Dramas Program

Frohman Amusement Corporation, Herbert Blache and George H. Wiley Form the Trio—Fourth Manufacturer in Negotiation with the Group

THE newly formed Art Dramas, Inc., is composed of three of the best known independent manufacturers in the business. Negotiations are now under way for a fourth manufacturer to come into the new distributing organization, but the plans have not been completed as yet.

Possibly the best known of the three companies making up this new program of fifty-two features each year is The Frohman Amusement Corporation of which William L. Sherrill is president. He is also president of the new concern. The Frohman Amusement Corporation has been in business about two years, and the quality of its product is well known throughout the trade. The pictures which it will contribute to the new releasing organization will be under a different brand, but will be made under the direct supervision of William L. Sherrill, who has been largely responsible for the consistently good quality of the productions of his company.

Herbert Blache of the Solax and United States Amusement Company, is another one of the manufacturers entering the new amalgamation whose product is well known. In conjunction with Madame Blache, he made the Olga Petrova, Edmund Breese and Mary Miles Minter productions for the Metro Program. His studio at Fort Lee, N. J., is completely equipped in every way, and he is in a position to turn out high class productions which at the same time can be rented to the exhibitor for a nominal sum.

G. H. Wiley, the vice-president and general manager is well known to all those familiar with the motion picture industry. He is the head of the Van Dyk Production Company which has taken over the old Kalem studio on West Nineteenth street. Mr. Wiley has been manufacturing pictures for about two years, having several five-reel features and a number of single-reel comedies to his credit. The studio is completely equipped in every way and is capable of turning out pictures of a high order.

The producing concerns making up the company are amply financed to carry out its policy and plans. The announcement of the first four releases will be made in the very near future.

Metro Pictures Successful in British Columbia

First Madame Petrova Picture Plays Capacity in Vancouver—Initial Releases Received Equally Well in Nanaimo and Victoria

WITH the introduction of Metro features in three of the leading theatres in British Columbia, the connecting link of Metro theatres in Canada from coast to coast has been consummated. Herbert Lubin, who is in charge of the distribution of Metro wonderplays in Canada, through the Standard Film Service, Ltd., has wired an extended report of Metro's reception in the new territory to President Richard A. Rowland, of the Metro Pictures Corporation. In Vancouver the initial Metro attraction at the Dominion thaetre was Mme. Petrova in "My Madonna," produced by Popular Plays and Players. Hundreds of people were turned away, and traffic was blocked for several hours in front of the theatre. A personal telegram from Mme. Petrova was read from the stage, provoking continued applause. Mme. Petrova is extremely popular with Canadian audiences. She has made several trips to Canada recently, where she was received with acclaim by first citizens of the Dominion, and she has assisted on several occasions in swelling some of the many funds for the men in the trenches or their families.

A heavy downpour of rain throughout the day did not dampen the enthusiasm of the Vancouver folk, and Mme. Petrova's debut on the screen there was little less than a municipal holiday. There was exceptionally strong opposition on this day, but it did not detract from the Dominion's picturesque opening of Metro. At the Globe, one block away, there was Marguerite Clark in "Lady Eileen," Mary Pickford was at the Mapleleaf, William Farnum, in "The Soldier's Oath," at the Colonial, and the Triangle had an attractive program at their theatre.

In Nanaimo, Metro's first offering was Edmund Breese in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," and it played to capacity business despite the fact that the counter attraction was a big carnival, the event of the year. In Victoria the Metro program was presented for the first time, and hundreds were turned away, atlhough it rained continuously throughout the day and evening.

LESSER WILL EXPLOIT "PURITY" IN THE MOUNTAIN STATES

A deal has just been closed between the Mutual Film Corporation and the All-Star Features Distributors, Inc., for "Purity" for the States of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico.

This move on the part of Lesser's concern opens a field of greater activity, as the Mountain States have always been a coveted territory on his part.

The move materially strengthens his buying power on the Pacific Coast, as it is his intention to include this territory, as well as the Pacific Coast, in negotiations for the big features to be released in the future.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"THE CONQUEST OF CANAAN"

(Frohman Amusement—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WE have half an idea that every exhibitor who caters to an intelligent audience would like very much to gain a reputation for having shown the best feature in—say six months or a year. "The Conquest of Canaan" is that feature, it might even be ventured that it is the feature. Considering it as a whole it represents the photodrama at its best. It tells an excellently constructed story, in which there is no wasted incident and the story is of the human interest, red-blooded kind that gets under the skin and makes it tingle and thrill. There is no turning to your neighbor when the third reel is over with the remark, "Good night! Are there three more reels of this?" The merit of "The Conquest of Canaan" can not be measured by its footage.

Based on Booth Tarkington's novel in which characterization and atmosphere count for so much, it is gratifying that the book fell into such capable hands to guide its migration to the screen. Both George Irving, the director and Anthony Kelly, the scenario writer succeeded in reproducing the novel in screen form in such a way that even the author himself may well be proud of it. The small town atmosphere is there in abundance. The characterizations of the smaller as well as the larger parts are deftly handled and the large number of characters are introduced without confusion. Mr. Irving's direction is so praisworthy on the whole and he has introduced so many artistic and individual touches in his work that we can readily overlook the presence of an old fashioned bicycle in one scene and a suit of latest cut clothes in another. We don't look for bones to pick in respect to "The Conquest of Canaan" because the meat is so tasteful.

The central character of the picture is Joe Louden, a poor boy of a small town whom everyone dislikes except a girl, Ariel. Joe has an uphill fight of it but after five years he blossoms forth a lawyer. In his big case skeletons of several respected citizens are brought out of the cupboard and Joe comes out a hero—a promising candidate for the next mayor of the town. His love affair with Ariel is very pretty.

It is Joe's fight to make good against foolish prejudice that gives the picture so much fascination. There is real dramatic struggle for you and you feel it—almost live in it. Jack Sherrill in this part does such sincere and whole hearted work that he gets the sympathy at the start and keeps it. Edith Taliaferro makes a delightful Ariel. Ralph Delmore as the Judge, Joe's main opponent does some fine character work. A cast composed of Marie Edith Wells, Gene La Motte, Jack Hopkins, Walter Hiers (a true comedian), Thomas Ward and Ben Hendricks gives competent support.

The comedy of "The Conquest of Canaan" can not be forgotten. It is just as important as the drama. The subtitles sparkle with humor and there are a number of excellent comedy scenes with Mr. Delmore and Mr. Hiers carrying off the honors. And then there is the humor in the four typical characterizations given by Martin Mann, Frank Buck, Phil Robson and David Higgins as the sages who decide the fate of everyone in the town while sitting around the hotel stove.

"ANTON THE TERRIBLE"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY THEODORE OSBORN ELTONHEAD

TO those who read the magazine story of "Anton the Terrible," in the Saturday Evening Post, and shuddered at the horribleness of the leading character this picture will be particularly appealing. Theodore Roberts, who has the leading role, has achieved one of the best characterizations of his screen career. His is an inimitable piece of acting from start to finish. He completely loses his own identity and sinks it in that of the mythical chief of the Russian Secret Police. Were his name not mentioned in the cast his closest and most intimate friend would never be able to recognize him in this character. This is indeed good acting.

Jules Eckert Goodman adapted the original story of Thomas H. Uzzell, and it was prepared for the screen by Marion Fairfax and Charles Sarver. In his adaptation Mr. Goodman has antedated the original story by several years and in order to get the visual continuity has been forced to incorporate much that the original story only suggested. For picture purposes this has greatly improved it. He has builded with one big dramatic incident in mind and has worked his story up to that point in a finished and artistic manner. Much of the revolting horriblencss that was in the original story has been eliminated to good effect.

The picture was staged under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille and is fully up to the standard in every way, shape and manner that this director insists upon incorporating into his product. In a De Mille directed picturc there is not much opportunity for the reviewer to comment. There is seldom little if anything to criticise and continued fulsomc praise bccomes banal with constant repetition. It is becoming sufficient to say that the picture was directed by Cecil B. De Mille.

Anton Persuades His Mother

The story is one of Russia at the present time and deals with a series of incidents shortly after the commencement of the present war. Anton Kazoff, known as Anton the Terrible is chief of the Okrana, the powerful secrct police of Russia. Becausc General Stanovitch wrongcd his sister fifteen years before and brought about her death Anton resolves to avenge himself through the General's daughter Vera.

It develops that there is a German spy high in the counsel of the Grand Duke and Anton is ordered to apprehend him. Later it develops that Anton is the spy. He murders General Stanovitch, in order to procure the Grand Dukc's orders to the Russian generals at the front, conceals the body, and then fastens the crime on David Burkin, Vera's lover.

Vera is caught at a meeting of a radical society and sent to prison. Therc by means of a code tapped out on the stone walls of the prison she learns of Anton's duplicity. When freed she goes with this story to the Grand Duke and in company with Burkin evolves the plan by which Anton is incriminatcd. At the dramatic moment when the accusation is madc his mother steps forward and states that she is the spy. The Grand Duke presenting his revolver to Anton orders him to shoot her. For a moment he points the gun at her breast and then drops it with the word "Mother" on his lips. Going quickly into another room he commits suicide.

Anita King pleased greatly as Vera, her magnetic winning personality doing much to make her scenes effective.

"THE GILDED CAGE"

(World Pictures—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY THEODORE OSBORN ELTONHEAD

ONCE more we have the mythical kingdom, the author's fancy has this time called it Balkany, but the central character is the queen who ascends the throne while Balkany is in a state of chaos. What does she do but disguise herself as a peasant, sally forth and mingle with her people. She meets a wandering prince, Boris by name, and falls in love with him. Boris with the disguised queen, is cast in prison by the Baron who aims to gain control of the kingdom, and it is only aftcr a series of exciting incidents that the queen puts the Baron and his followers to rout and announces herself and Boris as queen and king of the people.

A fascinating picture is this, of "The Prisoner of Zenda" type, that convinces and interests over its full length. J. I. C. Clarke is the author, while Frances Marion did the scenario. She was somewhat apt to slur over minor details in putting Mr. Clarke's story in continuity form, but on the whole the picture moves rcalistically and with conviction. There are some moments where bits of excellent comedy have been introduced, and, on the other hand, there are a good many spectacular street settings, peopled with large numbers of Balkany peasants.

Alice Brady plays the role of the queen with plenty of feeling, and Irving Cummings does Boris after the regular fashion of defiant and much beloved heroes. Montagu Love grimaces sufficiently to make a thoroughly detestable villain. Good support is given by Arthur Ashley, Alec Francis, Gerda Holmes, Clara Whipple and Sidney Dalbrook.

Harley Knowles dirccted and has made his picture typical of its kind. There seems to be no cause to worry about its success.

"THE YELLOW MENACE"

(Episodes Ten, Eleven and Twelve—Unity)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WHILE it may seem a trifle inconsistent to praise wild pieces of melodrama such as the tenth, eleventh and twelfth episodes of "The Yellow Menace" in the same hour as we take the typewriter in tow to call forth superlatives on feature productions of artistic and dramatic merit, it really is quite to be expected. Mainly it is because "The Yellow Menace" is a class serial. No one will deny that. No one would attempt to explain that "The Yellow Menace" was produced for the houses with a clientele of good education and intelligence. It is distinctly a serial for the lower type of audience which is easily influenced in favor of its entertainment if only it is served melodramatically enough. The more thrilling and rabid the melodrama the better the audience likes it.

And the producers of "The Yellow Menace" have certainly not gone amiss in the shaping of the serial. They have crammed it full of thrills, of plotting, of villainy and of heroism. No chance is left untaken to cast the villain, Ali Singh, in as despicable light as possible and no chance is left untaken to paint his opponents, the secret service men, in a most heroic light. And of course with wild melodrama there is plenty of coincidence and convenient situations that help the swift telling of the story beyond measure.

The tenth episode entitled, "A Message From the Sky," opens with Hong Kong Harry receiving a flogging from his master, Ali Singh. Najla nurses him afterwards and the two plot to escape from the clutches of the Yellow Menace and finally succeed. A flying machine is brought in for some purpose which was not exactly clear.

Making Ready for the Flight

In the eleventh episode, "The Half Breed's Hatred," Ali Singh secures possession of the two girls and lets Manning know that they will be released providing he gives himself up in their stead. Hong Kong Harry, bitter against his master for his recent flogging, tells Manning how he can rescue the girls and still save his own life by merely telling the police of the matter and having them raid the place. It seems to us that a secret service man might have thought of the police himself in such a situation.

Three Striking Scenes from Selig's "The Crisis," Showing Geo. W. Fawcett in the Character of Silas Whipple

"THE CRISIS"

(Selig-Sherman-Elliott—State Rights)

REVIEWED BY THEODORE OSBORN ELTONHEAD

"THE Crisis" is a big picture, there can be no doubt about that, but as it appears on the screen it is far bigger historically, and as a vivid absorbing concrete picture of the spirit of the times for the period just antedating the Civil War, than it is as either a drama or a story.

In fact it could hardly be called a drama in any sense of the word. It is more in the order of the historical novel, with much more emphasis given to the historical part, than to that of the novel. Adapted as it was from the novel of the same name by Winston Churchill, it presents in a vivid and effective manner the sectional feeling so prevalent through the south just previous to the Civil War. Mr. Churchill's novel, however, was absorbingly interesting from start to finish as a novel. The picture fails in transmitting that absorbing interest to the screen.

The thing that it does do, however, with a thousand times more emphasis that the novel could ever accomplish, is to depict the spirit, thought, and psychology of the people of that period, and that section.

It brings out in the most vivid manner imaginable the high feeling that was rife at the time of the Lincoln and Douglas debates, and owing to the super-excellent work of the late Sam D. Drane, vividly, and convincingly, the bigness and humanness of Lincoln both as a man and as a leader.

Some of the best scenes in the whole production were those in which this sterling actor, who has gone to his final resting place, figured. In this picture he has made Lincoln live again, and has revivified the spirit of his bigness and of his humanity.

The picture is replete with pathos, in fact there are times, when one feels that there is too much pathos. The death bed scene, when Judge Silas Wright passes into the great beyond, is one of the most effective that we have ever witnessed. As Bessie Eyton, as Virginia Carvel, sets down to the piano to play "Lead Kindly Light," his favorite hymn, it brings tears to the eyes of the most hardened.

The battle scenes showing the siege and capture of Vicksburg by Grant and the bombardment of Porter's fleet in the distance were effective and convincing although they did not contain the vast distances and spectacular effects that have characterized some of the more recent pictures of spectacle proportions. Vast quantities of soldiers have been handled with good effect, with a realistic semblance of fighting characteristic of that period. The night scenes, showing the bombardment of Vicksburg, by the fleet of gun boats down in the river, were particularly effective.

Thomas Santschi, as Stephen Brice, the young hero from New England, did a fine and commendable piece of work, handling the part with a dignity that was most admirable. Bessie Eyton was delightful as Virginia Carvel, petulant, self-willed, yet at the same time with a sweet appealing womanliness, that was most charming to witness. She has done quite the best work in this production of any in which we have seen her recently. George W. Fawcett did a fine bit of character work as Judge Silas Wright, while Matt B. Snyder was effective as Col. Carvel. Eugenie Besserer was sweet and pensive, as Mrs. Brice, and Marshal Neilan was most pleasing as Clarence Colfax. Others in the case were Frank Weed, as the smooth, oily Eliphalet Hopper, Will Nachin, Sam D. Drane and Cecil Holland. The lighting and photography were exceptionally good.

"THE FIRM OF GIRDLESTONE"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY THEODORE OSBORN ELTONHEAD

BANNISTER MERWIN is responsible for this adaptation from Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's story of the same name and he has accomplished a meritorious piece of work in that he has kept to the narrative style of the original story and not attemped to turn it into a drama. He has also taken infinite care with his character drawing, and there is not the least doubt at any time in the minds of those who see the production as to just the kind of people the various characters are.

The original story of Conan Doyle's tells of a rich puritanical, hypocritical, London merchant, who, when he gets into financial difficulties, first endeavors to make his ward marry his blackguard son in order that he may get possession of her fortune, and when this fails, plans to murder her, as a provision in her father's will bequeaths the money to John Girdlestone in case his daughter should die unwed. At the last moment a jealous maid masquerades as the wealthy young girl and meets the fate that was intended for her mistress.

The Wrong Victim

The picture has been most ably produced under the capable direction of Harold Shaw, who must be especially commended for the manner in which he selected the locations. Several scenes showing parts of London were especially fine. It does not seem possible that they could be imitated so faithfully.

Charles Rock gave a faithful portrayal of the puritanical John Girdlestone. It was a fine bit of character work throughout. Fred Groves scored as Ezra, his son, while Edna Flugrath was particularly delightful as Kate Harston, the misused young ward. Others in the cast were Hayford Hobbs as Tom Dimsdale, Wyndam Guise as Major Tobias Clutterbuck, and Molly Terraine as Rebecca. The lighting and photography were well up to the usual Vitagraph standard. Taken as a whole, it is a well conceived and well produced picture and one that no exhibitor can make a mistake in heavily advertising.

"THE GIRL FROM 'FRISCO"

(Kalem-General Film—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY THEODORE OSBORN ELTONHEAD

ONE of the pleasing facts about this series of two part modern western dramas is the fact that they have up to the present utilized such a diversity of material. The stories do not, as is so often the case, hold to one particular class, but embrace all classes. Possibly this is one of the reasons why the series has been so well received.

The title of this episode is "The Reformation of Red Dog," and tells in a delightfully amusing manner the way Barbara Trent succeeded in reforming a rough western mining town when all other means fail. The cowboys and rough element of the town had a habit of periodically shooting the place up and destroying the property of the railroad of which her father was president. Barbara takes the place of the station agent and by her winning ways soon has every cowboy worshiping the ground she walks upon.

Kalem's "Girl from Frisco" Company, Showing Director James W. Horne and Marin Sais in Front of the Number Plate of the Locomotive

In order to keep them away from the tough saloon and gambling hall she starts a game in the box car she uses for a house and by cleverly manipulating the cards soon wins not only all of their money, but takes their promises to pay for large amounts. The keeper of the gambling hall, now that his profitable trade has been taken away, resolves on revenge. His assistant hearing a train order over the telegraph instrument locks Barbara in the freight car so that she cannot execute it. There is danger of a head on collision. Barbara blows the door off the freight car with a stick of dynamite and owing to the peculiar construction of the railroad is able to ride across country on horse back and thus avert the accident. Barbara gives the cowboys stock certificates in the road for their I. O. U's and thus making them part owners averts trouble for the future.

The picture was well worked out in every detail, direction, acting and continuity. Marin Sais and True Boardman in the leading roles pleased as usual and the lighting and photography was up to the usual standard. The supporting cast was made up of Frank Jonasson, Ronald Bradbury, Edward Clisbee, Steve Murphy, and Jack Wilson.

"THE BATTLE OF THE SOMME"

(Patriot Film Corporation—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THESE pictures dealing with the long and terrific battle of the Somme in France which are offered by Charles Urban, are without doubt the best war pictures ever projected. "The best," however, does not aptly describe them. They are really the most terrible, because never before to our knowledge has an actual charge been made right before the camera and never before have we seen men double up and fall dead.

There is no fake charge there. The men don't make the motion picture director's fall. There is no clasping the hands to the breast, wheeling around in mid air and then falling gracefully on the back. The fall is no way near so dramatic. The men just fall—flat on their faces. And there is no fake, we repeat—you know its real.

And there is another dark side to the picture and that is shown in scenes which were taken after certain battles, after the Germans had retreated from their first line trenches. In those scenes we see the field covered with dead. And we see the bodies being buried by the Allied soldiers. The sight is enough to make a Mars a pacifist for life.

So much of Mr. Urban's picture is new to the films. The rest concerning army routine, marches, encampments, the tending of the wounded, trench life and the like is all vastly interesting, although it has been shown in other pictures. That, however, does not detract a whit from Mr. Urban's series of views. They are arranged well, intelligently subtitled and every once in a while comes a scene scattered between the rest that makes your heart sink at the thought of it all—some scene showing a prisoner caring for a wounded comrade—or a dog or a horse dead on the field of battle.

If one has time to realize that he is seeing a motion picture, he will marvel at the nerve of the cameraman. He got the charge and a man dropped not many yards from the camera. And other times he had it peering over the top of a trench to catch the effect of the British shells on the opposition trenches. The photography is clear enough to permit the picture to be followed without undue disturbance.

If you want authentic views of the war which go far into the real tragedies of the conflict, "The Battle of the Somme" is not easily to be surpassed.

"THE MAKING OVER OF MOTHER" AND "BY THE SAD SEA WAVES"

(Christie Comedies—One Reel Each)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE second brace of comedies which Al Christie will release on the open market are fully worthy to be classed with the the first two, which exhibitors should know by this time were of an unusually high order. "The Making Over of Mother" and "By the Sad Sea Waves" are brimful of clean, good comedy, especially is the former picture which is one of the best single reelers made by Mr. Christie's company in a long time.

In it hubby balks at the proposition of having his mother-in-law on for a visit. But he is completely taken in when the good old lady dresses as a member of the younger set and court's her son-in-law. When he finally discovers her identity he admits the laugh is one on him. For once does the producer decline to poke fun at the mother-in-law and the picture is refreshing for this reason alone. The comedy contained in the reel is rich, while settings of an unusually elaborate nature for a one-reel production do much to enhance the picture.

Charming Betty Compson is the wife, Stella Adams, her mother, and Neal Burns, the husband. Ethel Lynne also appears. Robert McGowan wrote the story and Horace Davey directed.

"By the Sad Sea Waves" takes place at the sea shore and concerns the romance of two young things which is constantly menaced by the father of the girl. There is much humor here too, although the story presented is not as connected as that in the one previous. However, there is no fault to find because of that, for "By the Sad Sea Waves" is a rapid fire comedy bordering on the chase picture every now and then which type of production is ever in demand.

Edna McBeth is the author of this one, while Al Christie himself took charge of the directing. The cast is headed by popular Billie Rhodes and includes in support Harry Ham, Harry Rattenberry, Stella Adams, Ethel Lynne and Nolan Leary.

"LOST—TWENTY-FOUR HOURS"

(Essanay—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

A STAGE farce is usually a jumble of mistaken identity, impossible situations, and exaggerated actions, with a good deal that is risque. This farce follows its stage prototype in every respect, excepting that it has nothing salacious in it.

The cast of popular players is vivacious and well-selected, and it makes the most of the infrequent dramatic opportunities. Richard C. Travers is the lead, supported by such favorites as Marguerite Clayton, Harry D. Dunkinson, Warda Howard, Gertrude Glover, and John Junior.

The plot has several novel twists, and brings in many incidents that are laughable. The details of production were carefully attended to, and the photography is good.

When Dick's wife goes to visit her mother, the young hubsand resolves to lead a model life. But Adolphus, a bachelor friend, takes him out for several holes of Broadway Golf. They meet two young ladies whose profession is blackmailing. Next morning Dick climbs into bed and sleeps twenty-four hours. When he wakes up he finds the girl he met the night before in the house. She refuses to leave until she gets a check for $1,000. Dick's aunt and girl cousin arrive for a visit, and he is forced to pass off the adventuress as his disowned sister. Many complications arise, culminating in Dick's being sent to jail, but everything turns out all right in the end.

PARAMOUNT SHORT SUBJECTS

(Travelogue, Pictograph and Cartoon—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

IN the Burton Holmes Travelogue this week we have unusually interesting and instructive scenic views. It starts off with "In Old Ireland" and with the camera mounted on the roof of a trolley car or omnibus we are taken along the "Broadway" of Belfast. The City Hall and other public buildings along with scenes of the traffic with the different public vehicles peculiar to this section of the country are graphically shown. Next we are taken to Dublin and to the Horse Fair where the contest for jumpers is filmed. The water jump, the five-foot stone wall jump are two of the most interesting. Some of the street scenes taken on the way back from the fair are reversed and some amusingly funny scenes are the result.

The Pictograph opens with good views of a newspaper in the making, from the time the reporter brings in his story to the finished paper. The linotyper, matrix machine and finally the presses at work are all graphically shown. Motor cycles as used in the army, as ambulance and also in trick riding are shown. But what will probably make the biggest hit are the scenes posed for by the New York Giants baseball team with Umpire "Bill" Klem. First is shown a man "running for first," the first baseman jumping for the ball and the umpire declaring the man out. By slowing up the man is seen to reach the base while the baseman is still in the air and is consequently "safe." A number of similar scenes are shown up by the "slow camera" showing how the umpire can err in close decisions.

The Bray Cartoon has the adventure of O U Rooster, a "gay flirt" and a "chorus chicken," which is an amusing comedy conception to say the least. On the same reel is "The Busy Life of an Orbweaver." It shows the spider spinning its silky web; capturing a grasshoper and smothering it in silky meshes and other instructive scenes in the busy life of the spider.

"THE TORCH BEARER"

(Mutual Masterpiece—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY E. DRAW

THIS picture affords an excellent opportunity for the display of the dramatic talents of William Russell. It is just the type of story which demands the vigor and virile interpretation which characterizes Mr. Russell's work and makes him particularly suited for the role of the rigid minded and aggressive newspaper man John Knox. Charlotte Burton also brings her versatility into play as Janet Dare.

The story is rather interesting as it deals with political intrigue, although as a matter of fact a hundred plots have been written around this same theme. The action is swift and the interest well maintained.

The photography, settings and locations are all good, and the production capably handled by William Russell. It is safe to say that this film will find favor with the majority of audiences.

John Huntley Knox, owner of the Boston Star, opposes a corrupt ring of politicians with his newspaper and is aided by William Wendell. The gang threaten John, declaring that his father killed a man out West.

This threat is followed by a series of political mob fights. Janet Dare arrives from Wyoming bringing with her a strong box carrying the personal effects of her father who was a rancher. Janet falls in love with John. It is later discovered that the box contains a confession signed by a Mexican on his deathbed that John's father was innocent. Janet is kidnapped by the politicians, but is rescued by John. The politician is beaten, John's candidate is elected to office and the film ends pleasantly with Janet and John as the center of attraction.

GENERAL FILM SERVICE

"Money to Burn." (Essanay. Two reels. Tues., Oct. 10.)—This comedy-drama not shown for review; the story follows: Major Gray, who lives in a small town in the North, believes that the Civil War is still raging. He is reputed to be extremely wealthy, and when Helen, his niece and only relative, questions him about it, he insists that he is saving money to further the Confederate cause. Helen becomes the stenographer in the town hotel. Dislike of Carew, a guest, is a common bond between the girl and Lawrence, a young salesman. Carew tries to woo the girl for the fortune she will inherit. Failing in this, he wins the old man's confidence. Later, when the old man dies, Carew takes his entire fortune and disappears. Later a large bundle is sent to Helen. It is her uncle's fortune—a bale of Confederate money. In the cast are Lillian Drew, John Lorenz, Edmund F. Cobb and Arthur Bates.

"Canimated Noos Pictorial, No. 17." (Essanay. Split reel. Wed., Oct. 11.)—In this release Wallace Carlson, the cartoonist, presents his latest burlesue of the news weeklies. The second half of the reel is taken up with North American scenic.

'Lost—Twenty-four Hours." (Essanay. Three reels. Sat., Oct. 14.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Battered Bridegroom." (Kalem. Fri., Oct. 13.)—This single-reel Ivy Close comedy, which is the last of this series by the way, was written by Samuel J. Taylor and staged under the direction of Robert Ellis. It has to do with a young girl, whose parents are endeavoring to force her into an onerous marriage, and her rescue by her young lover. Much of the comedy element depends on the work of Henry Murdoch as a typical motion picture barber, and the incorporation of the old chase idea modernized and brought up to date.

"The Girl from 'Frisco." (Kalem. Wed., Oct. 11.)—"The Reformation of Red Dog." Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Love Magnet." (Kalem. Tues., Oct. 10.)—Ham and Bud have a fine time in this single-reel Ham comedy. Bud in order to win the affections of a beautiful young girl buys a love magnet and not only attracts her but every pretty girl that comes anywhere near him. Ham, jealous, goes and steals a magnet, but this one has the power of only attracting old maids. There follows a change of magnets by the two and then a chase in which the two groups of women chase Ham and Bud into the sea. The magnets are so powerful, however, that they attract two mermaids from the bottom of the sea, and the picture closes with Ham and Bud swimming about in their arms.

"To Save the Special." (Kalem. Sat., Oct. 14.)—This is one of the most exciting and thrilling episodes ever shown in "The Hazards of Helen" railroad series, and that is high praise. Helen Gibson, on the back of a galloping horse, pursues a runaway that is really running away, and jumping from the back of her own horse to that of one of the runaways, succeeds in guiding the team to the edge of a cliff, where the wagon goes over the brink, exploding the load of dynamite which it carried. It is a mighty fine picture mighty well done.

"Converging Paths." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Oct. 9.)—This release, evidently made some time ago, would have been considered good three or four years ago, but is somewhat antiquated now. The story is one of the highly moral and highly improbable kind that used to be popular. The players do not make any effort to present fine shades of meaning, they merely act as lay figures in carrying out the rather pointless story. The photography and settings are not always of a high grade. The cast consists of Robyn Adair, Virginia Kirtley, Leo Pierson and Eugenie Forde. Nell is a country girl and Dan is a product of the slums. Their life paths are far removed until Nell goes to the city. Dan, out of work, sinks lower and lower, and finally becomes a pickpocket. One day Dan snatches Nell's purse from her hand, causing her to be thrown out of her boarding house by the irate landlady. Sick at heart, she goes to a local rescue mission for a night's lodging. Dan pursued by the police, hides in this mission. Thus their pathways come together. Dan is suddenly converted and becomes an honest farmer. Some years later he goes back to the city and claims Nell as his wife.

"A Mistake in Rustlers." (Selig. Sat., Oct. 14.)—While this Western is not as good as some of the recent Selig releases, it is yet good enough to make a hit with audiences that like cowboy acting. The photography is poor in spots. Excellent horsemanship is introduced throughout the picture. Tom Mix directed and takes the lead. In his support are Victoria Forde, Sid Jordan and Leo Maloney. Tom and Vicky are sweethearts. Buck, a cattle rustler, is jealous when Vicky gives Tom a silk handkerchief. Buck steals this present, goes to a neighboring ranch, ties up a calf with it, and starts to brand the animal. He purposely delays this operation until the ranch owner comes into sight. The owner sees the rustler riding away, sees the silk handkerchief, and knowing it to be Tom's, sends the sheriff after the innocent man. Meanwhile Vicky has discovered who the real cattle thief is, and rides to tell the sheriff. The sheriff's posse has surrounded Tom's cabin when Vicky rides up and explains the affair.

"A Grain of Suspicion." (Vim. Wed., Oct. 4.)—This is a comedy featuring Harry Meyers and Rosemary Theby, and the plot hinges on a husband's jealousy coupled with his stinginess as to "pin money," almost breaking up a home. It is only a fair number and does not come up to the standard set by Meyers and Theby in other releases from the same company. The story is very "forced," but the acting of the principals and the good photography tend in a way to make up for this fault. There are quite a few laughs and the sub-titles are quite funny in themselves. It makes an acceptable release but nothing extra.

"The Fable of the Kid Who Shifted His Ideals to Golf, and Finally Became a Baseball Fan and Took the Only Known Cure." (Essanay. Wed., Oct. 4.)—This George Ade fable not shown for review; the story follows. There once was a Messenger Boy who thought Jess Willard was the King of Men. He forgot his Ideal when he Hooked a job as Caddy, and listened to the Poor Nuts rave about Tough Lies and Bum Approaches. Then the Kid got the baseball Fever. When the Fan came to Life's Ninth Inning, his Better Half pleaded for a final message. His lips moved. He wanted to know if there was anything in the morning papers about the condition of Heine Zimmerman's kneecap. Moral: There is a Specific Bacillus for every Classified disease.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

Reel Life, Mutual Magazine. (Mon., Oct. 2.)—An important section of the reel is devoted to explaining how the lines in the palm of the hand betray character and foretell the future. This is followed with a picture of a man whose arms have been cut off at the elbow, yet he is able to earn a living by fancy writing. The third section of the reel is a reproduction of a baseball game played during the world's series last season by Boston and Philadelphia. If there is a demand for more ball games with the actual reproduction of plays by automatons, the Gaumont Company will give the world's series of 1916.

"A Touch of High Life." (Vogue. Sun., Oct. 8.)—This is one of the best comedies seen recently. The fun is fast and furious throughout and it will afford excellent amusement for any audience. Paddy, the street sweeper, finds Arthur, who is slightly the worse for liquid refreshment, staggering along the street. He takes him home to his room to sleep it off and Arthur is so much obliged to him that he insists that Paddy should take his wallet and go out to have a good time. The street sweeper dresses up and starts for the beach with a letter of introduction to some girls which Arthur's sweetheart had given him. Arriving at the summer resort, he finds himself the centre of attraction, until a life guard comes along. Paddy bribes the man to let him have his suit. The girls all fall for him—that is, all but Gypsy, Arthur's sweetheart. In the meantime the young spendthrift has awakened in Paddy's room and is hastening with the assistance of the police to the point where the sweeper is enjoying himself. Gypsy and Arthur are reunited, and Paddy gets off as easy as it could be expected. The cast includes Paddy McGuire, Arthur Moon and Gypsy Abbott.

"Slicking the Slicker." (Beauty. Tues., Oct. 3.)—Quite a fair comedy, which will create a good deal of enjoyment. Barney, with the aid of Gertie, determines to get the best of the rest of the bunco gang, who have frisked Barney of the stake he has just made. Barney disguises himself as a rube, lets the gang trim him at cards, then tells them that unless he can sell his farm he cannot go on with the game. Gertie takes them aside and tells the men that she knows the farm, and that though the rube does not suspect it, there is oil on it. The gang offers Barney the money they have won from him, but he refuses to sell. They finally dig up all they can find and receive a deed to the farm in exchange. On inspecting the farm they find that there is no oil. In this way the slickers are slicked. The cast includes Orral Humphrey, Jo Taylor, Joe Massey.

"See America First." (Gaumont. Mon., Oct. 2.)—Some remarkably effective pictures of Lake Placid, Paul Smith's and Saranac have been secured. The advantages of the Adirondacks lie in their combination of natural charm and comforts of civilization. One can enjoy life at a palatial hotel, lodge or club, and then by going a few miles find himself in a comparative wilderness. These scenes have been transferred to the screen to give spectators an idea of the unlimited and wonderful possibilities of this region. On the same reel there is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic animated by Harry Palmer.

"The Pawnshop." (Mutual-Chaplin. Mon., Oct. 2.)—"The Pawnshop" has considerable plot, but not enough of the dramatic to get into the way of Chaplin's irresistible comedy. He is funny all the way through, with a thrill or two introduced as he goes along. The story, scenario and direction are all in Chaplin's hands. Charlie is a clerk in a pawnshop owned by the father of Edna. Rand, another employee, is jealous because Edna prefers Charlie, and they are constantly fighting. Campbell comes to shop ostensibly to pawn an umbrella. He finds no one to attend to him, so he pretends to steal the cash register. He is stopped by the entrance of Edna. To cover himself he says he would like to buy the business. While the pawnbroker and Campbell are discussing the possibilities of the business a fight is going on between Charlie and Rand in the kitchen. The pawnbroker goes in to settle the disturbance and Charlie quickly hides in a trunk. Meanwhile Campbell intends to steal some valuables from the vault but is struck on the head and rendered unconscious by Charlie, who thus saves the pawnbroker a heavy loss.

INTERNATIONAL

"Beatrice Fairfax." (Episode 8.) The title of this, "At the Ainsley Ball," almost tells the entire story. The interest that has been kept alive in the series, as each episode, complete in itself, unreels itself, is remarkable to say the least. At no point in this number is the beholder able to turn away even for a moment for fear he may miss something.

A title hunter attempting to elope with an heiress is frustrated by Beatrice and her partner Jimmy Barton, as he is essaying to escape with the jewels of the girl. Grace Darling and Harry Fox keep up their good work, and Mae Hopkins makes an acceptable heiress. The interiors are exceptionally good in this number and the photography up to the standard.

"Beatrice Fairfax." (Episode 9.) In this episode, which is one of the most absorbing of any so far, Miss Fairfax and Jimmy manage to secure a packet of letters from the home of a blackmailing editor, and thereby save a young matron an unenviable position. The title, "Outside the Law," tells just how far they go to accomplish their ends.

This is another number that bears out the point, "each complete in itself," and again a most acceptable number is forthcoming. The acting is up to the standard of the rest of the series, the photography is good, and if such a thing were possible, the story or plot is the best of the series as far as it has gone. The stories have all been so interesting that it is hard to say that one is "the best."

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

"A Nation's Peril." (Pathe. Two reels.)—A melodrama in which foreign spies attempt to secure important plans from an American army officer. They go about it in a familiar way, using a woman as a tool, but she falls in love with the officer and ends the game by blowing up the launch on which her former confederates are escaping with duplicate plans. This is done in true melodramatic fashion and manages to work up considerable excitement. The acting is the old school, the principals driving home the significance of their expressions by trouping in the face of the camera. Crane Wilbur, Paul Panzer and Octavia Handworth are the leads.

"The Grip of Evil." (Balboa. Two reels. Thirteenth episode.)—"The Grip of Evil" has developed in its recent chapters into a serial, as in this chapter, entitled "Judge Not," the story begun in the twelfth number is continued on. It bas to do with social reform and the conversion of a capitalist who thought that criminals could never go straight, until one of them proves himself grateful for the help extended by his daughter by giving himself up for a crime committed by the son. This makes interesting entertainment all the way.

"The Shielding Shadow." (Astra. Two reels. Fifth episode.)—The mysterious mask and hands are most prominent in this number of the serial entitled "Through Bolted Doors." Leontine and her husband both seek the confession signed by One Lamp Louie and the former is successful in procuring it through the assistance of the mystic personality. Afterward, however, it is taken from her and destroyed by One Lamp Louie himself. There is a good bit of comedy and many thrilling bits to this number, which keeps the pace set by the preceding four to a satisfactory degree.

"Luke and the Bang Tails." (Rolin.)—This comedy, staged with Luke and the usual supporting cast, takes place in the stables and about a racing track, which field offers an unusually generous supply of opportunities to pull new and highly laughable gags. The action is fast and furious all the way. As a slapstick it ranks with the very best of the one-reelers.

"Betty at the Wedding." (Florence Rose Fashions. No. 6.)—Aside from displaying the fashions in great abundance, this release is probably the best staged piece that Miss Rose has produced. The settings are good and the incidental business that Miss Rose has worked into the scenes is natural. As for the fashions, which of course have to do with weddings, they are no doubt the latest things, displayed on models who are very pretty.

Pathe News, No. 78. (Wed., Sept. 27.)—Military parade, El Paso, Texas; New York Giants in midst of long winning streak, New York City; views from Salonika, Greece; primitive methods of farming in American backwoods; on the western front in the war zone; Mayor Thompson starts marathon, Chicago, Ill.; fire wipes out Phoenix, N. Y.; dozen hurt in subway crash, New York City.

Pathe News, No. 79. (Sat., Sept. 30.)—President Wilson arrives in Baltimore, Md.; schools reopen, New York City; police rookies direct traffic, New York City; best boy scout receives medal from President Wilson, Long Branch, N. J.; exhibition of caterpillar tractors; animated cartoon by L. M. Glackens; more scenes from the western war front; Australian troops scarred from battle leave London, Eng., for home; Bishop of London describes war conditions to large crowd, London, Eng.; exhibition of new life belt, Chicago, Ill.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Almost Guilty." (Nestor. Mon., Oct. 9.)—In this comedy by Walter Newman, the Nestorites offer a highly pleasing picture. It concerns the antics of the groom and the best man on the night before the wedding and how they come to believe themselves guilty of murder. Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean are cast in the principal parts and get the full worth from their roles.

"Cheaters." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Oct. 10.)—Lack of good technique in the writing of this scenario has resulted in a rather unconvincing picture that draws generously on coincidence to put several of its points over. It is a story of society and crooks in which the heroine comes under suspicion for stealing. Mary Fuller is cast in the lead part and receives support from Harry Spingler, Paul Panzer and others. Lucius Henderson directed.

Mollie Malone and Jack Nelson in "Her Idol" (Universal)

"Behind Life's Stage." (Universal Special. Two reels. Thurs., Oct. 12.)—A story suited generally for juveniles, concerning itself with a struggling milliner's apprentice and her little sister. It concerns some clever double exposure work and altogether makes a very fair release of its kind. Flore Parke De Haven is seen in the leading role, while others are Charles Cummings, Margaret Whistler and William Welsh. Alan Holubar is the author.

"A Soul at Stake." (Imp. Two reels. Fri., Oct. 13.)—This film, which is of mediocre quality, is about a gambler who rescues a girl from the clutches of Chinese slavers. There is some suspense in the scene where the gambler plays cards for the girl with the Chinaman, but on the whole the big situations are not very well brought out and there are several stary characters. The director has employed the cutback so many times that the story is not even. William Garwood and Lois Wilson are the leads.

"Night Shadows." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., Oct. 14.)—A good heart interest story is presented in these reels midst a novel setting, although it would have been for the picture's betterment had some of the fight scenes been shortened. We get too much of them. Otherwise the picture is very good, well produced and keeping one's interest at a high pitch throughout. Willis Robards directed. There are no familiar faces in the cast.

"When Little Lindy Sang." (Powers. Sun., Oct. 15.)—A highly entertaining juvenile drama in which a little colored school girl, generally despised by her classmates, saves them all from panic when the school house burns by singing at the top of her lungs. Olga Printzlau wrote the scenario and Lule Warrenton directed. For children's entertainments it is excellent.

"The Oil Smeller." (Joker. Sat., Oct. 14.)—Ernie Shields in his comical role of Lord Helpus in search of oil in the West, puts this picture over in good style. Instead of oil he discovers Indians and makes off with the daughter of the tribe. The business, chiefly that taking place in the camp of the modernized Indians, is very funny.

Everything for Theatre, Exchange and Studio

The Size of the Production Room

NEXT in importance to the actual location of the projection room in a Motion Picture theatre comes the size of the room.

In days gone by and in the older theatres we find what was always referred to as the "Projection Coop." This last should have been known as a cell—it was in reality more unbearable than many which we find in our prisons.

IN the present day factory engineers are employed to figure out for a given floor space, with a given number of people working, exactly how many cubic feet of fresh air is needed in order to support human life and keep it efficient. This is a modern development, and in order to put it in force we find new ventilating devices invented to handle it.

If they are suitable for the factory, why aren't they just as suitable for the theatre and projection room which is always the last place considered worthy of fresh air.

In some of the newer theatres we find that they have been made use of and in many cases the old "sweat cells" have become somewhat more bearable, but the improvement, we hope, has only begun—the start, however, is encouraging.

IT must be borne in mind that the operator is human and that it is his effectiveness and ability to do his work right which means either success or failure on the screen—picture it for yourself—it does not take much imagination.

Here is a room 6 x 8 feet or perhaps a little larger containing two projection machines—the ceiling is low—behind each machine there may be from one to even three feet—around the room are converters, rheostats, arc controllers, rewind table—the film boxes containing the film to be shown and other equipment of various kinds jammed in wherever an inch can be found.

OVER all this the operator or his assistant has to do a hurdle race when it is necessary to move about. One of the projection machines is working—the lamp house is throwing out enough heat to make the room into a miniature hell.

Uncomfortable? Try it yourself. There is a projection room in every house, some far better than others, but yet few which would ring the bell of perfection—anyone will give you an idea of what we mean.

LAST week we treated of the position of the projection room—combined with this and to be considered at the same time is the size of the room—they cannot be divorced, or even thought of separately. The Projection Room is the heart of your theatre and the line of projection is the artery along which the picture travels to the screen.

Everything else is secondary and any architect who advises differently should be absolutely barred from theatre building.

WHAT size should a projection room be? You know the answer to the question "How long should a man's leg be?"—Long enough to touch the ground. Simple?

So a projection room should be large enough as a minimum so that the operator may do his work efficiently and well without being crowded and without being bothered by incidental troubles, such as crowding, heat, etc., which must be eliminated. Remember that with this adequately taken care of and the equipment being right, the operator has absolutely no excuse for not putting on a 100 per cent. picture.

THERE is only one other point which is advisable but not an absolute necessity providing the projection room is adequate in size. The equipment required is considerable and takes up a great deal of space which even in a large projection room is better placed elsewhere. It is therefore that a few—only a few—of the very newest houses are putting in a separate room connected with the projection room in which all the electrical devices and other permanent equipment is placed.

TO sum up—everything should be done, before the plans for a new or remodelled house are passed upon by the owner, to see that:

1. The line of projection is horizontal.
2. The projection room is large and airy—dustless and free from stagnant heat through ventilation.

There is little need of worrying about the rest, for the architect is building the house not only for you but for his own reputation, and you may rest assured that he will make it as fine to the eye as your pocket book will allow.

You may take it for granted he knows nothing about projection.

E. K. GILLETT.

A Visit to the Westinghouse Electric Co.'s Plant at East Pittsburgh, Pa., Treating on the Construction and Action of the Westinghouse Arc Rectifier. Under the Guidance of Messrs. H. M. Wible and A. L. Atherton, Mr. Sherman Is Shown Through the Plant and Writes of His Experiences

LAST week I endeavored to explain to you briefly the action of the mercury arc rectifier manufactured by the General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y. This week we will treat the construction and action of the Westinghouse Mercury Arc Rectifier, manufactured by the Westinghouse Electric Company, East Pittsburgh, Pa.

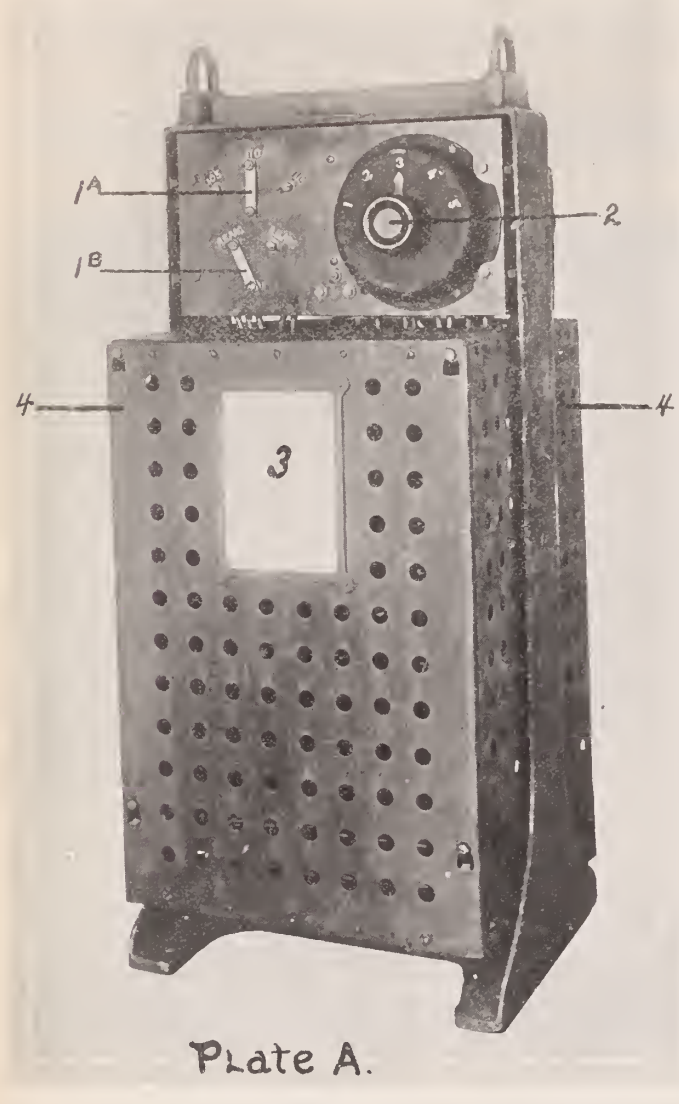

Plate A. 1-A, Upper Connecting Link; 1-B, Lower Connecting Link; 2. Dial Switch; 3, Instruction Sheet; 4, Perforated Sheet Iron Casing

During my visit to the plant of the Westinghouse Company, I was taken in charge by Messers H. M. Wible and A. L. Atherton who spared no pains to make my visit one of education and profit.

The rectifier manufactured by this company is unlike those of other manufacture in that the tube is enclosed in a cast iron frame, with sufficient ventilation to prevent breakage. It is also made in three sizes: 30, 40 and 50 amperes, there being no difference in the design or appearance, whihc is the same for all.

In plate A we get a very good idea as to how the device looks when installed. Each outfit consists of a cast iron frame on which is mounted an auto transformer, reactance coil, tilting mechanism, relay, a five-point dial switch, adapting links, tube and tube holder, all of which are enclosed in a perforated sheet steel cover, which gives the machine a compact appearance and yet does not take up any unnecessary floor space. The adapting links are known as the "upper" and "lower," each has its own work to do. 1-A, is for the purpose of changing the connections on the reactance coil so as to obtain proper voltage adjustment at the arc for different supply voltages. That is, if the A. C. supply coming into the hose is 110 or 220 that does not mean that you are getting that pressure at the arc, for due to various causes there may be a pressure ranging anywhere between 210 and 230, or 105 and 115 volts. But by the use of this link it is possible to take care of these variations and make a connection suitable for the actual voltage, which you can determine by use of an A. C. voltmeter, or if a voltmeter is not available you can request the lighting company to make the test.

An Emergency Adapter to Allow A. C. Operation

The lower link adapter, 1-B, is used in an emergency, and allows the machine to be operated on A. C. should anything happen to the tube. When operating on direct current this link should be connected from the lower of the three binding posts to the upper right hand binding post marked "D. C. Arc." As shown in the illustration the rectifier is now ready to operate on A. C. for the reason that the link is connected from the lower binding post to the upper left hand binding post marked "A. C. Arc." Particular attention should be paid to having the wing nut perfectly tight so as to clamp the links firmly in place.

The dial switch shown at "2," is for the purpose of enabling the operator to vary the current at the arc to any desired amperage within the limits of the machine. It is possible to get five different current values by simply moving the switch from one point to another which can be done without breaking the arc.

"3" is an instruction sheet for operators mounted in an iron frame and protected by glass; this sheet shows the method of wiring and by carefully following the instructions any operator can install this device with very little trouble. "4-4" is the perforated sheet steel casing which prevents the machine from sustaining any damage owing to carelessness in working about it.

"1" is the transformer, "2" the bulb, held in place by the holder springs, 3-3-3-3, is the wire terminals which are to be connected to the tube nodes and cathodes. "4" is the tilting magnet frame, and "5" the tilting magnet. "6" shows the mercury in the bulb, while "7" is the resistance box terminal, and "8" the terminal board to which the wires are connected.

Plate C, is a rear view of the rectifier with casing removed showing the reactance coils, the auto transformer, relay magnet, etc., 1 and 2 are the D. C. leads which connect to the arc lamp circuit, 1 being the negative, and 2 the positive. The positive must connect through the switch on the motion picture machine to the top carbon of the lamp, and the negative to the bottom carbon of the lamp. The A. C. leads, 8-8 connect directly through a switch properly fused, to the alternating current supply.

Magnets for Tilting Tube to Prevent Rocking

The relay 14, is a magnet that is used to operate the contacts which open the tilting magnet circuit when the arc is started, and prevents the tube from tilting or rocking at any other time, which it would do if it were not for this cutout.

The auto transformer, 11-11, consists of an iron core with a winding of heavy copper wire. It resembles the ordinary transformer, but has this difference, the connections are such that it has only one winding, while the ordinary transformer has two; a primary and a secondary. The purpose of the auto-transformer is to change the voltage of the A. C. supply to the pressure required at the arc.

The tilting mechanism is a device so connected that the closing of the carbons energizes coil 5, plate B, and thus causes the tube to tilt.

The reactance coil, 15, in appearance resembles the transformer. It is connected into the A. C. circuit for the purpose of limiting the flow of current when the carbons are brought together to an extent where it will not be injurious to the tube, and also tends to insure steadiness, and prevents any great fluctuation of current when the length of the arc is changed, which makes the arc so much easier to handle.

Care Should Be Taken Not to Touch Tube

The tube is something that the operator should never tamper with under any consideration; it is a glass bulb from which after a quantity of mercury has been placed, has had all the air removed causing a vacuum. It has four terminals, the upper ones being what is called the graphite anedes, the smaller, lower one the starting anede and the larger one the cathode. When the bulb is in an upright position the mercury in the two lower terminals is separated, but when the tube is tilted the mercury joins itself and forms a contact which puts the tube in action.

Special Instruction on Unpacking New Tube

One thing in particular to bear in mind when unpacking a new tube is to see that it is in good condition, which can be determined by turning the tube over and letting the mercury run down into the terminals slowly. If the tube gives off a sharp, cracking sound, this is an indication that the tube is in good condition. Also follow out the instructions which come with the tube, and if you do this and use care in uncrating, you will experience no trouble whatever.

Don't forget that it is absolutely necessary to have fuses of proper capacity when using a rectifier which is operated by closing the A.C. line switch and the machine switch bringing the carbons together, which causes the tube to tilt, a contact to form between the puddles of mercury in the two lower terminals, until the arc starts, when the tube will light up and come to rest in a vertical position. As soon as the tube lights be sure and separate your carbons until you have a steady arc and the greatest amount of illumination upon the screen.

Next week I will try and describe the various types of motor generators used in projection work.

LUDWIG HOMMEL AND COMPANY MAKE REPORT OF NUMEROUS SALES OF MINUSA SCREENS

LUDWIG HOMMEL AND COMPANY, of Pittsburgh, report the following sales of Minusa screens: Shiloh theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa.; American Zinc and Chemical Co., Burgettstown, Pa.; Peters & Manos, Toronto, O.; Manos Bros., Greensburg, Pa.; G. W. Reese, Kittanning, Pa.; W. H. Woods, Roaring Springs, Pa.; Geo. Panagotasos, Johnston, Pa., and Lyric theatre, Oil City, Pa.

TheM inusa Cine Products Company has received instructions from the Casino Feature Film Company, of Detroit, to prepare and build a Minusa Gold Fibre according to specifications for the Ferry Field theatre.

The Notable Feature Film Company, Salt Lake City, Utah, have taken an order from the Judith theatre, of Lewistown, Montana, for a large Minusa Gold Fibre screen, together with a special frame for shadow-box purposes.

This screen is now being built to fit the specifications of their house, and it is to be installed the latter part of September, when the Judith opens.

The Paramount Empress, in Salt Lake City, recently installed a Minusa Gold Fibre, and they were so well pleased with it that they recommended the same to the management of the Judith.

TRAVEL GHOST TROUBLE

R. E. Johnson, Burton, Ohio, writes: What makes a travel ghost appear part of the time and the rest of the time not show up at all? Sometimes at the starting of the show there will be none whatever while at the close there will be quite a ghost. The shutter appears to be tight on the shaft. Could you obtain an instruction book for an old model Edison, and a Powers 6-A and send them to me?

Ans.—Your trouble is evidently due to lost motion somewhere. A short time ago while visiting the Speer Carbon plant at St. Marys, Pa., the operator there was experiencing the same trouble, and on making an examination of the projection machine I found that the gears were so loose that they "wobbled" and the pin which held the crank shaft was so loose that it allowed the shaft to turn at least 3-16ths of an inch. In starting the machine the operator had no ttrouble whatever as long as he kept turning at the one speed, but when feeding the lamp his hand would instinctively slacken speed and there would develop such a ghost as to make the spectator blink his eyes, but as soon as the speed was again at normal the flicker or ghost would disappear. Examine your machine closely and see if there is not undue play in the train of gears on the opposite side of the mechanism from which you operate. If not, examine the small toggle gear which is found between the driving gear and the balance wheel pinion; if this is badly worn it should be taken out and replaced, being careful that you do not get it in so tight that it binds. It may be quite possible that there is too much play in the shutter shaft itself, even though the shutter is tight upon its shaft. Try turning this shaft with your finger, meanwhile holding the fly wheel with your other hand so that there is no movement at the intermittent, and if there is more than just a perceptible movement in the shutter shaft the slackness will have to be taken up, but, I do not advise you to attempt this; it is far better to send the mechanism to the manufacturer and have it done right. If you do not find a remedy in anything that I have suggested write me again and explain more fully just how the ghost appears.

I believe that I mailed you some time ago, instruction book for the Powers 6-A machine. If you have not received it let me know and I will send you another. The instruction books for the Edison model that you speak of are as scarce as hens' teeth, owing to the fire in the Edison plant at Orange. The plates were destroyed, and it is impossible to obtain any of their pamphlets on that type of machine. These people are perfecting their latest model Super Kinetoscope; the machine built like a battleship, which I am hopeful of describing in these columns at an early date.

RECTIFIER TROUBLE

P. V. Williams, Munday, Texas, writes: I have been in the picture show business for three years, and have been taking the News almost the entire time, and have every copy I have received. As I take care of the operating room myself the Projection Department interests me most and I find it to be of great help.

As this is my first call I am going to ask a question or two and ring off. I have a 35 ampere mercury arc rectifier which at times I cannot get enough light through although I have it raised to the last notch. I have been using this rectifier since March 15. When first installed I could get plenty of light and the two carbon points (Anodes is what you mean—Ed.) inside the tube would get red, but here of late they stay black all the time. Does it make any difference if the voltage is less than 110, coming into the house? I might add that this is a G.E. 35 ampere, 110-220 volt A.C. to D.C. rectifier. I have a Powers 6-B machine, a picture 9 x 12 at 65 feet throw, using 6½ and 7½ condensers. Carbons are Bio ⅝ cored.

Ans.—Thanks for your kind words of appreciation. I am glad that my poor efforts are of some assistance and trust you will not hesitate to call upon us for any assistance that may be in our power to give. To answer your question: It seems to me as though your trouble might lay in a poor connection somewhere in the circuit.

You say that when first installed you could get plenty of light, and that now you are unable to. If the rectifier has only been in use since March 15th, it hardly seems possible that the fault can be laid to that. It may be possible though that you have been overloading it.

A rectifier of 35 ampere capacity does not mean that the device should be operated at that amperage continuously, and as the amperage is regulated by the arc, it is quite possible that you have kept your carbons too close together which would increase the amperage and burn out the tube. The line voltage, if it does not fall too far below 110 volts, will not have any great effect upon your not being able to get sufficient light. Are you sure that you have a rectifier for the frequency of curernt you have? A 60 cycle rectifier will not operate on 120 cycles, nor vice versa.

Examine your lamp leads and see if they are not badly blackened or charred, and if they are, take them out and cut off the charred portion until you get to fresh wire, then see that the lugs are put on again tight and that the binding posts of your lamps are clean and bright which will enable you to get a perfect electrical contact. Also occasionally tap the upper part of the tube gently to dislodge the mercury that may be deposited there. This sometimes will become very great and when it is dislodged will have a tendency to revive the tube.

In place of the cored carbons top and bottom, I would suggest that you try a half inch hard carbon in the bottom, setting them so that the bottom carbon is just a trifle advanced ahead of the upper which will allow you to get a perfect crater with the resultant better light.

If this is not clear to you, and after trying the suggestions made you do not find a remedy, write me again and I will go more into detail with you and see what can be done.

CLEANING FILM POSITIVES

In September 23rd issue of the News there appeared an article under the above heading, in answer to a query made by O.F.F.C., of Albany, N. Y. in which the following instructions for cleaning film were given: "Anyone can thoroughly clean a reel of film by the use of some "elbow grease," a rewinder, several yards of canton flannel and a pint of benzol (or benzine).

The reel of film being mounted upon the rewinder, a yard or so of the flannel should be torn off and saturated with benzol. This should be laid on the rewind table and—having laid the film on it—one end of the flannel is raised up and placed over the film. The flannel is now pressed tightly down upon the film with the palm of the hand and rewinding commenced.

After each hundred feet or so of film the flannel should be opened and examined to see how much dirt has accumulated. If the cloth is badly fouled a fresh section should be brought to bear on the film, and so on until the reel is cleaned."

In a letter from that master of projection, Cecil R. Wood, whom I have known for some years, he came across the following:

"I read your reply to O.F.F.C. of Albany, N. Y., re the care of and cleaning of positive films. First let me thank you for the allusion to the writer, in spite of the fact that modesty caused him to blush slightly at the title applied to him. Secondly let me give you a little more dope on the matter alluded to. For the solution to keep in the film cabinet pans, use one ounce of gum camphor to a half pint of glycerine. While this works very well while the films are in the cabinet or in the film vaults, the question came up as to their care on the road, and this may interest some of your readers, provided they are equipped as we are in the shape of reels. We use the 2000 bolt Bell & Howell reel which has a large hollow center (hub), and take a roll of absorbent cotton and slightly dampen it with the above solution, roll the cotton in a cheese cloth binder, and work same into the reel hub, and if you could see the condition of the road prints that have come in after a full year's work, you would no doubt feel just as happy as I do.

Now on the cleaning: We have tried almost everything that has been advised, but at last we have struck the correct dope, thanks being due to the film department of the Eastman Kodak Co., and oil and dirt worry us very little now. Use Carbon Tetrachloride (Merck Chemical Co.) and apply the same way as per instructions for benzol. It not only removes every trace of oil but likewise does not injure the film in any way as to color, neither does it affect the emulsion.

This letter from brother Wood, even though not merited by me, is greatly appreciated, for Cecil R. Wood is not only an operator but a gentleman as well, and besides that he is a very busy man, as it is he who is responsible for the projection of Griffith's latest masterpiece "Intolerance" now being shown at the Liberty theatre, N. Y. City.

The instructions contained in his letter should be of great value to those operators who are desirous of putting over clean pictures, and who hope to raise themselves from mere crank turners to the classification of operators.

The thanks for the things said in the former article are due not to me, but to my friend "A.S.C." editor of the Camera department, and I take this opportunity of making my apologies to him, and accepting the invitation of brother Wood to visit him for the purpose of obtaining further dope which I feel sure will be of interest to my readers.

HOSFORD EXPLAINS HIS SHUTTER

Chas. A. Hosford, the inventor operator of Ft. Wayne, Ind., writes in as follows: I want to apologize for not explaining more plainly the action of my shutter which you described in the issue of the NEWS, dated Sept. 2nd. When I wrote that letter enclosing the drawings, I had one eye shut and the other partly so, for it was written after the show and by the time I had finished with them it was in the wee sma' hours, and I am generally hitting knots on the log pile by 2 a. m. Well here goes. I hope I can explain it this time. What I meant by drawing down to the center of the picture was this: If you were to take a piece of cardboard and out one side of it, concave and push it in front of the stero lens, there would be a shadow shown on the screen from the opposite side to that in which the cardboard is placed in front of the lens, two pieces of cardboard coming together from opposite directions and meeting in front of the lens would bring the shadows together from the sides of the screen. The shutter acts in the same way, only instead of doing it sideways it does it with a downward motion and brings the shadow from the bottom of the screen upward and works out the picture on the screen by rounding off into a circle which gives the dissolving effect and eliminates the flicker. I hope this will be clear to the readers of the department, and I want to say that there certainly seems to be a lot of operators who are ambitious, for I started to write this letter last week but have been so busy making shutters that I was unable to finish it. I certainly am glad to know that I am not the only one that has ambition; it gives me heart to do things and to experiment for the purpose of obtaining better results on the screen, and anything I discover which I think will be of benefit to my brother operators I will design and shoot it in for you to give it the once over and pass your opinion on it. You have got me interested now and I am liable to keep you busy. I have a recipe for a liquid film cleaner which I am going to send you to try out at your leisure; it will take an old dried up film and polish and clean it and make it look like a new one, and put new life in it, but I am afraid I could not give it for nothing, as I have spent nearly a hundred dollars in experimenting, trying to find what I wanted. I will make the price reasonable, but first want you to examine it and pass your opinion on it. I am also sending you on a separate page a drawing of that "other thing" I mentioned. It is a safety device to control the fire shutters on the port holes of the operating room. If you think it has any value you can do what you want with it. What I mean by "value" is, if it will be of any use to any operator print it. I see my other letter did not reach the waste basket and hope that this one will not until after you have read it, and for fear that you will become tired reading this and throw it there I will ring off now.

Ans.—The article which the brother mentions was published on page 1426, of the Sept. 2 issue, and is the invention of a progressive operator, one who does things not only to benefit himself but the craft at large. It is always a pleasure to hear from brother Hosford, and you are welcome to keep me just as busy as you like. Your letters do not even receive an introduction to the waste basket.

In regard to your explanation I think it will be reasonably clear to those who like myself were unaccountably "thick." I had no idea I was letting you in for so much work when I wrote my former article, but I am glad you took it good naturedly, and much credit is due you for your desire to help other operators to better their projection; it is sadly needed, and any man that will sit up half the night making shutters, after doing a hard day's work is deserving of thanks, for it proves that he is sincere in his desire to be of benefit to the industry.

I will be very glad to try out your recipe for a film cleaner, and if it can do all you say it can I will let others know it. The drawing you sent me I was unable to use, but if you will redraw it, using black ink, I will submit it to my readers for their approval. I will admit that it looks good to me and I see no reason why it should not work. But we will see what some of the others have to say about it, as soon as you get time to draw it over and explain it more fully. Keep up the good work and your dream for better projection will be realized.

LENS INVERTS THE PICTURE

P. C., Steubenville, Ohio, writes: I have been a constant reader of the News since it was first published and would like you to settle a dispute between me and some of my friends who also read the News. I claimed that the eye reversed the picture, while they, my friends, claim it is the lens. I am an experienced operator and believe that I am right and wish that you would publish the correct answer as soon as possible. With best wishes to you and the News, I remain very truly yours.

Ans.—Sorry old top, but you lose. Your friends are right. The picture is reversed by the lens and not by the eye. I think I understand the point you are trying to make, but the optics of the human eye are entirely different from the optics of a projection lens.

The eye can be likened to a camera lens which records an object in an inverted position, that is if you are taking a picture of a house it will appear upon the ground glass or plate in the camera in an upside down position. The eye records everything you look at in an upside down position upon the retina, for the reason that it is nothing more or less than a plane convex lens, with the other elements added as are in a projection lens the image would again reverse itself and appear as it does when you look at it.

The projection lens reverse the picture, either in the lens itself or at some distance from it. So far there seems to be some doubts as to where the picture reverses, but you cannot get away from the fact that it is the lens that is responsible, otherwise it would not be necessary to thread the film into the machine upside down. Get me?

PICTURE THEATRE EQUIPMENT FURNISHES CHURCH WITH SIMPLEX MACHINE AND FORT WAYNE COMPENSARC

ANOTHER church has been added to the long list of users of the motion picture for educational purposes. The Picture Theatre Equipment Company, 1604 Broadway, New York, reports the installation of a new Simplex machine, with motor, a Fort Wayne Compensarc and complete booth supplies, to the St. Luke's Church, Long Branch, New Jersey.

"MOVIE CLUB" OF MILWAUKEE OPERATORS MOST SUCCESSFUL AND GROWING ORGANIZATION

THE Movie Club, the subsidiary organization of the Milwaukee Operators Union, which was organized by seven operators to provide a place of recreation and meeting for members of their union, has grown most rapidly, and though but a few months old is already one of the most popular organizations in the city. This club, which is self-supporting, boasts of what is without doubt the only dry bar in all of wet Milwaukee. For the boys, while not prohibitionists, have decided that the club would be better off without the bar, and the result has more than justified their judgment. In addition to the bar, the boys have a pool and billiard room, card room and meeting room. All members of the union have full use of the club rooms and monthly blow outs are given which prove very successful affairs. Here also are held the monthly meetings of the union. All traveling operators are cordially invited to attend the club rooms, which are located at 223 Third St., when in Milwaukee.

One of the most attractive floats and the best appearing organization in Milwaukee's huge Labor day parade was that of the local Motion Picture Operators Union. Some forty members were in linc clad in white shirts with white caps and carrying Japanese umbrellas with the American flag emblazoned upon them. The float which bore a huge likeness of the operators emblem was most attractive.

OPERATORS IN MINNEAPOLIS DEMAND PAYMENT OF FIFTY CENTS FOR FIRST VISIT TO EXCHANGE AND TWENTY-FIVE FOR TRIPS TO SUBSEQUENT EXCHANGES

RUMBLINGS of labor trouble have been heard in the Minneapolis picture field for the past few weeks. The operators have presented to the theatre managers their demands. Several meetings have been held by both factions and a few joint meetings were called. The theatre managers have presented their compromise. It is understood, however, that one of the demands of the operators upon which they are obdurate is that they will not pick up or deliver film to the exchanges unless they secure fifty cents for the first exchange visited and twenty-five cents for all other exchanges visited.

It is believed that the wage scale will be settled amicably. Considerable time was spent arguing the point of permitting an operator to appoint a substitute on the days he takes off; it was also a requirement of the union that the operator get one day off a week. It is expected that a decision will be reached within a very few days.

CALHUFF ACQUIRES AGENCY

THE Calhuff Supply Company, of 1301 Race street, Philadelphia, have become eastern distributors for Rembusch's Crystal (Gold) Fibre Screen, manufactured by the Mirror Screen Company of Shelbyville, Indiana. F. B. Bloomfield, personal representative of the company, has been in Philadelphia to assist in introducing the screen in this vicinity.

It is claimed for the screen that it is "built upon honor, sold on merit, speaks for itself and sings its own praises."

That it is already meeting with favor here is shown by the theatres which have either installed or ordered the Rembusch Screen.

These are Stanley, Regent, Victoria, Great Northern, Franklin and Empire of Philadelphia. Queen of Wilmington, Grand of Chester, with others, in prospect.

The price of the Crystal (Gold) Fibre Screen varies from $64.00 for the smallest to $260.00 for the largest size.

STERN PUTS PROJECTOR ON DISPLAY IN NEW YORK

THE Stern Manufacturing Company of Philadelphia have placed their late model projection machine on display at the Crown Motion Picture Supplies, 217 West Forty-second street, New York City. Many exhibitors and operators have seen the merits of this machine demonstrated here during the past week. Mr. Katz is very enthusiastic over this machine, and is looking forward to do a good business with it this fall.

STRAND OF NASHVILLE TAKEN OVER BY PEERLESS AMUSEMENT COMPANY

THE Strand theatre, one of the newest, largest and finest photoplay theatres in Nashville, has been taken over by the Peerless Amusement Company, Inc., with a capitalized stock of $5,000. The Strand occupies one of the most prominent places along Fifth avenue, represents an investment of $25,000, and has a seating capacity of 350 persons. The Strand is novel in several details. There are broad aisles, an unobstructed view of the screen from any seat in the house, and plenty of room between the rows of seats for persons to sit comfortably without being crowded. The incorporators are: J. H. Bradford, president; Edward Martin, Grover Billingsby, Roy Shelton, formerly manager of the theatre, and Jordan Stokes, Jr.. Carson Bradford, long identified as being one of the most successful theatrical managers south of the Ohio River, has been appointed secretary-treasurer and general manager of the Peerless Amusement Company. He will also manage the Strand theatre. When seen by a representative of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, he said: "We have secured a long contract with the Fox Film Corporation and the Metro Pictures Corporation to show their 'first run' photoplays exclusively in Nashville."

Mr. Bradford uses the newspapers and billboards freely for advertising coming attractions. Besides having the Strand theatre, Mr. Bradford also owns and controls two other photoplay houses, one being the Belmont, the other being the Empress. The Belmont is located on Belmont avenue, and since its initial opening night has been doing a good business. The Empress is located on Woodland street. This theatre is also doing a nice run of business.

The Strand under the new management held its formal opening on the morning of September 25. The occasion was accompanied by vast quantities of flowers, the gayest of music, and the admiring comments of hundreds. Every one of the 348 seats were taken long before the opening of the first performance at 10 o'clock.

MALTESE CROSS CONDENSING LENSES ARE EFFECTIVE

FOR some little time I have been experimenting with the condensers manufactured by Semon Bache and Company, known as the Maltese Cross brand of crystal condensing lenses. These lenses are being produced from chemically pure optical glass which is guaranteed against discoloring black, purple, violet or any detrimental tint. After continual usage for a period of six months or more they may develop a slight straw color, but this is in no way detrimental to good projection, for it in no way destroys the effectiveness of the lenses.

The surfaces of these lenses are ground and polished automatically, thus insuring a true optical surface as well as a commercially accurate foci. They are put through a most rigid test in the process of annealing which is as follows: The original plates of glass, before being moulded to shape, are thoroughly tempered and annealed for a period of three days. The glass is then moulded to form and is again annealed and tempered. These precautionary annealing and tempering processes have resulted in reducing breakage to a minimum.

I feel that I can safely say these condensers are all that the manufacturers claim for them, and while there are some who are bitterly opposed to any discoloration at all in a condensing lens this slight straw color which may develop will not have any bad effects upon the picture being projected.

These lenses can be had in all shapes and sizes, namely plane convex, meniscus, bi-convex or bi-concave, and of any focal length or diameter.

MOTION PICTURE SUPPLY COMPANY, KANSAS CITY, INCREASES ITS SPACE

THE Motion Picture Supply Company, in the Gloyd building, Kansas City, has increased its space. H. G. Gill, manager, is selling six and seven machines every two weeks now and is expecting the moving picture business in his territory to be an extraordinary one both for the exhibitor and the exchange man this winter. The company is adding the two rooms adjacent which were occupied by the Western Film Company.

George H. Kendrick, who for some time has been an exhibitor and again has worked in the motion picture supply houses of the South, has taken up his work as salesman for the Motion Picture Supply Company, Kansas City. Mr. Gill is confident of the success of his new road representative.

Color Vision—Young Helmholtz Theory and the Clerk-Maxwell Curves—Fundamental and Complementary Colors—Hue, Purity and Luminosity of Colors—Additive and Subtractive Color Mixing

WE have, heretofore, in the course of our article been considering the uses of various forms of spectroscopes and the characteristics of spectrum colors. Spectrum colors, being pure colors, are the colors of science, but we will now consider the colors of the objects in nature which are termed "natural colors."

In 1810 Thomas Young, the physicist, propounded what has become the generally accepted theory of color vision. Young's theory is—that the retina of the eye is provided with three distinct groups of nerve cells, sensitive to red, green and blue-violet light respectively. All of these three colors act, to some extent, on all of the three groups of nerve cells but each color acts with the most intensity upon the particular group created for its own perception. Another distinguished scientist, Helmholtz, concurred with Young in his theory, which is therefore known as the Young-Helmholtz theory of color vision.

This was further demonstrated by Professor Clerk-Maxwell in 1861 by the process of plotting out the amounts of red, green and blue-violet light necessary to reconstruct the spectrum. Maxwell's color sensation curves are shown at A, Fig. 9. As it is seen that a complete spectrum (with no gaps) is produced by the admixture in proper quantities of red, green and blue-violet, we may consider that red, green and blue-violet are fundamental colors, or as sometimes called "primaries." All other colors are formed by combining, in certain proportions, two or all of these primary sensations, as is shown by B, Fig. 9.

Maxwell's Curves

Although the original Maxwell curves, as shown at A, Fig. 9, have been recalculated and modified (by Abney and others) to conform to present day knowledge and practice; Maxwell's curves remain the foundation of three-color photography and many successful processes have been calculated from the Maxwell color sensation curves. Their importance should therefore be appreciated by all readers, and they should be carefully studied, as they have an important bearing on some processes to be described later.

Some of our readers, the operators of projecting machines, have the opportunity of making experiments with colored lights which will be the means of advancing their knowledge of light and color. If red light is projected upon a screen by a lantern (or stereopticon) then green light projected over it from another lantern, and, lastly, blue-violet light is projected upon the other two colors by a third lantern, it will be found that the screen result is white. This, however, will not occur if glasses of these three colors are all placed in the slide-carrier of one lantern and projected together, for reasons which will be considered further on.

As another experiment yellow light is now projected upon the screen from one lantern and blue-violet projected upon this from another lantern. The yellow glass in the slide-carrier of the first lantern absorbs (holds back) the blue but transmits the red and green rays, while the blue grass in the second lantern absorbs the red but transmits the green and blue-violet rays. As light rays of all the colors necessary to produce white are transmitted by the two glasses, our screen result is again white. From this we see that it is possible for white light to be formed by some combinations of two colors only. Pairs of colors which will, when suitably mixed, form white are said to be complementary to each other.

The following is a list of colors which are complementary or minus (—) to each other and thus when combined will form white:

Red + Greenish blue = White
Yellow + Blue-violet = White
Green + Pink = White

Or subtractively:

White — Red = Greenish blue
White — Yellow = Blue-violet
White — Green = Pink

As complementary or "minus" colors play an important part in color photography it is essential that the readers should familiarize themselves with the combinations here set forth.

Color Constants

When examining colors the student or experimenter will find it convenient to be able to describe the appearance of a color and be able to definitely compare its appearance with other colors. The units or constants by which colors are compared are "hue," "purity," and "luminosity."

The hue of a color is its actual tint or appearance to the eye. For instance, we say it is red, or yellow, or green, etc. The purity or saturation of a color means that it is really a pure hue and not degraded by admixture with white or black. It does not necessarily follow that a pure color is always a bright color for the pure colors of the spectrum are not all of equal brightness, pure red and blue appearing much darker than yellow as will be readily appreciated.

Speaking of the relative brightness of colors naturally brings us to a consideration of the third color, constant luminosity. The luminosity or brightness of a color is governed, of course, by the amount of light which it reflects to the eye. The luminosity of a color is not dependent upon its hue or purity, but rather upon its admixture with other colors. If yellow, the brightest of spectrum colors, visually, be degraded with a slight amount of black its luminosity will therefore be lowered. If this impure yellow is now compared to a pure blue we might sum up by saying that the color, while still yellow in hue, is of less purity than the blue, but still higher than the blue in its luminosity value.

Practically all of the color seen in nature is white from which some of its component colors have been abstracted. When light falls upon an object it is either transmitted, reflected or absorbed. As an example of the transmission of light, let us consider a piece of red glass. The glass appears red because it absorbs (or holds back) the green and blue light but being transparent transmits (allows to pass through) the red light.

Let us now consider the case of white light falling upon a piece of white paper. The paper being opaque reflects the light back instead of allowing it to pass through. As the white paper does not absorb any of the components of the white light it is practically all reflected back. The paper therefore appears white.

Selective Absorption Plays Important Part

Now an example of absorption—A spot of red ink is made upon a piece of white paper. White light falling on the red ink spot is absorbed selectively. In other words the red ink spot absorbs the colors green and blue but reflects back the remaining component of white light, red. Hence the spot appears red to the eye. If all of the light falling upon an object is absorbed the object, of course, appears black.

A thorough study should be made of the subject of selective absorption because in addition to the majority of colors in nature being the result of selective absorption, it plays an important part in the selection and adjustment of the filters used in color work, and even the colors of a finished color photograph or projected result are due to the influence of selective absorption.

We have now to consider the effect of mixing colored lights as compared to that of combining colored pigments (such as pieces of colored gelatine or glass, dyes, inks, etc.). As has been previously stated white is produced by projecting one over the other upon a white screen, red, green and blue lights from three lanterns.

But in superimposing colored pigments (as in making a print in colors) it will quickly be found that if we employ the colors red, green and blue, our result will appear opaque or black because the light transmitted by any two of these colors will be cut off by the third. We have in this case the effect of subtraction instead of addition of the colors. Therefore, in combining colored pigments, it will be necessary to use as primaries the complementary colors to red, green and blue-violet, which are bluish green, pink and yellow.

The mixing of colored lights is called "additive" color synthesis, while the superimposing of pigment colors is called "subtractive" color mixing.

As most all methods of producing photographs (or motion pictures) in natural colors are either additive or substractive processes the readers should familiarize themselves with the points of difference between additive and subtractive color synthesis. By so doing they will be better able to understand the methods and processes of producing photographs and motion pictures in natural colors which will be described in forthcoming installments of "Color Photography."

Scientific Considerations Are Necessary

It might seem to some readers that an article on Color Photography need not be prefaced by such scientific considerations as have gone before, but the correspondence of the Camera Department tends to show that much time and money is being expended in vain by numerous experimenters who have undertaken to "set the world on fire" with natural color motion pictures, only to find ultimately that, without accurate scientific knowledge of light and color, their efforts had failed and that they were as far from being able to show any concrete results as they were when they started.

Our idea in presenting to readers of the Camera Department the foregoing chapters (of a scientific nature) on light and color has not been for purposes of instruction, but rather to serve as a guide to the experimenter and embryo inventor as to what scientific considerations must be regarded before any really intelligent efforts can be made to produce motion picture in natural colors.

Our considerations from now until the end of the article will be of an entirely practical nature, for, commencing with our next installment we will describe the processes by which photographers have, from the earliest days of the art, endeavored to record nature's hues.

(To be continued next week)

MICROSCOPIC FILM SUBJECTS

P. H. W., Birmingham, Ala., inquires:

"Can you tell me where I can get some motion pictures of the circulation of the blood in the blood vessels, and such phenomena as cell division or the movements of the white blood cells? Some of this work, which is of course done with the aid of a microscope, I have seen but have been unable to find out who made the films. If you can give me the information I will greatly appreciate it."

In reply: We have seen a number of film subjects such as the correspondent describes, and wonderful films they are too. All of the microscopic films depicting the action of the blood corpuscles (in health and disease), which we have been fortunate enough to see were issued by Pathe Freres. These microscopic films were made at the research laboratories of the Pathe firm in France. They are the work of a noted French microscopist and investigator, Dr. Comandon. In order to obtain these wonderful records, Dr. Comandon designed special and elaborate apparatus. Many of these subjects were secured by the use of the ultra-microscope.

If the correspondent will communicate with the Pathe Exchange, Inc., of 25 West 45th Street, New York, we believe that they will gladly apprise him as to what subjects they have on hand, and upon what terms such pictures may be purchased or rented.

PYRO FOR FILM DEVELOPMENT

M. P. S., Ogden, Utah, writes:

"We are informed that several producers are using Pyro entirely for development, and by the tank method. We are equipped with two 50-gallon tanks, but thus far, have been using Metol-Hydro and since we have but a few pounds of Metol left, we wish to save it for paper work, therefore would appreciate such information as you can give on the subject."

In reply: So far as we are able to discover none of the large producers or laboratories are using the Pyro developer for motion picture film. Not much can be said in favor of the Pyro developer at this time. Although Pyro is obtainable in considerable quantities at present, it is of American manufacture and seems to lack the stability and purity possessed by the imported article. According to our observations these deficiencies of the domestic Pyro result in considerable staining of the gelatine of the film thus processed, and the Pyro at present being sold has a tendency to cause dichroic fog if development is forced to any extent. Dichroic fog (as is generally known) is a deposit on the negative which appears green by reflected light and pink by transmitted light, and is exceedingly difficult to remove.

If the correspondent is, however, determined to try Pyro for film development we refer him to the Pyro formula published in the Camera Department, issue of August 12th, in the article on "Color Sensitive Film." While this formula was specially compiled for use with Panchromatic film, it has proven to be a very efficient developer for ordinary negatives as well. Pyro is not to be considered at all by the serious worker for the development of film positives.

From time to time there have appeared in the Camera Department descriptions of various new developers and substitutes for Metol, which are now available. We believe that if the correspondent were to give some of these a trial good and satisfactory results would be secured.

Our opinion of the use of the straight Hydrokinone developer for processing Cine film, which appeared in a recent issue of the Department, and is not favorable to the Hydro bath, is being strengthened every day by the harsh screen results issuing from laboratories using the Hydro developer (presumably on account of its cheapness).

ROTHACKER ISSUES MEMORANDUM BOOK FOR CAMERAMEN

THE Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago is getting out a very neat memorandum book for cameramen. On one side of each page is ruled space for writing a description of each scene. The opposite sides of the pages are numbered consecutively from 1 to 50. These numbers are made large, so that they can be filmed at the beginning of each scene. On the same page appears a blank to be filled in with the footage of the scene. On the same page appears a blank to be filled in with the footage of the scene and the length to which it is to be cut. There is also plenty of room on the page for noting the titles of pictures.

The book is bound with stiff cardboard and its size is just right for slipping into the pocket. One of the best features of the book is a set of reminders that give good advice on securing screen brilliancy.

The Rothacker Company is sending these books to cameramen, post free, for 75 cents apiece.

A NOVEL ROAD EQUIPMENT SUPPLIED BY PICTURE THEATRE

THE Picture Theatre Equipment Company, of 1604 Broadway, New York City, report that they have supplied James F. Sargent of New Haven, Conn., a special road outfit that consists of a Powers 6 mechanism, with a specially constructed stand, a 6-A lamp house and lamp with a circular rheostat that can be readily adjusted for either 110 or 220 volts, and a complete set of the famous "Piteco" condensing lenses.

A notable feature of this equipment is that where it is not possible to obtain electric current, the 6-A lamp may be removed from the lamp house at a moment's notice and a special attachment inserted that will allow the use of a calcium burner which is attached to this special attachment and used in conjunction with a Model B gas making outfit.

GEORGE L. BARROWS OF BERLIN ANILINE WORKS HAS ADVANCED IDEAS ON LABORATORY PROCEDURE

George L. Barrows

AMONG the recognized motion picture laboratory experts of this country is Mr. George L. Barrows, whose portrait is reproduced herewith.

Mr. Barrows, as is known to many of our readers, represents the photographic department of the Berlin Aniline Works of 213-215 Water street, New York.

Throughout the long period of photographic chemical shortage since the outbreak of the present war Mr. Barrows has made strenuous efforts to keep the various film laboratories adequately supplied with tinting colors and developing chemicals. The Berlin Works' metol substitute and another efficient developer, Caltone, were made available through Mr. Barrows' efforts, which assures him of the gratitude of many photographers and laboratory superintendents.

According to statements made by Mr. Barrows, the utmost in quality and precision of results in processing cine film have not as yet been realized, and he prophesies that the future will bring forth some time, labor and chemical saving system of printing and developing motion picture film.

Such a prophecy, coming from Mr. Barrows, is certainly worthy of belief.

ROTHACKER CAMERA CREW OFF TO BORDER FOR 10,000 FEET OF FILM

ONE of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company's camera crews, under the direction of W. B. Klingensmith, has left for the Mexican border. This crew will secure 10,000 feet of film representative of the activities of the Illinois National Guard now stationed in that territory.

E. H. Philippi, sales manager of the Rothacker firm, is now in New York City, where he will attend a special advertising conference. Following this visit he will make a trip to other Eastern cities, where he will confer with local agents of the company.

E. Linden, who has had charge of the Rothacker camera crew in Yellowstone Park, has returned to Chicago after covering the assignment. Harry Birch, director of another crew, is leaving for the extreme Northwest, where he will secure some mountain scenic views.

Music and the Picture

Edited by Ernst Luz

This department is maintained for the exhibitor's assistance with a view of suggesting proper musical illustrations for current photo plays. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be pleased to help solve any difficulties the exhibitors may have with their musical programs. All communications should be addressed to the Music and the Picture Department.

Why Many So-called Music Programs are Worthless

THE following letter is another of many communications of favorable comment on the article by Mr. Lovett, contributed to this department and appearing in these columns a short time ago.

The Motion Picture News.

Dear Sirs: In your August 19th number, I noticed an article written by a Mr. Lovett. I never read an article so absolutely true in all my days. The musical programs as are gotten out by the different companies, or are, as a rule, printed in different magazines, are "impossible." I am very particular as to the proper and correct selections being used to fit scenes, and all the explanation I can find for these poor miserable apologies for programs, is that the one who picks them has never played for pictures, but reads over the synopsis and if one scene is preceded by the title, "Dawn," they place At Title.....Dawn.....use Dawn.....by Vannah. He does not know if a midnight party is breaking up at dawn or if the lover is killing his sweetheart at dawn, or what the scene is, nor does he stop to think of the effect of the music if Dawn appears on the music, that is enough.

I appreciated this write-up more than anything in the paper, as I have so many times written just such criticisms in your paper.

I am an expert photoplayer operator, being in the business for the past eight years, and have followed the musical end closely, and never yet have I seen one program that could be used by any sane musician.

Thanking you for your time and hoping that more people will take up this subject, I am, sincerely,

Carrie Hetherington.

P. O. Box 220, Oakland, Calif.

We are certainly glad to receive these expressions of opinion and we want to go even further by requesting our correspondents to write us similar articles. We are especially anxious to get the opinions of many wherewith we may hope to arrive at a method which will be of universal benefit to those interested in Music and the Picture. I hope to have more helpful articles from Mr. Lovett in the future. He is a practical man and has the necessary experience from conducting pictures in the orchestra pit to make him a worthy and intelligent writer.

Too Specific Suggestions Are Valueless

Miss Hetherington undoubtedly misunderstands part of Mr. Lovett's meaning as regards musical plots or suggestions. The point that Mr. Lovett wanted to most emphatically impress was the fact that suggestions which required just a certain musical number, were valueless to a person when trying to set a musical program, unless such a number is included in his repertoire or is known to him. While the point of criticism taken by Miss Hetherington is quite correct in very many instances, nevertheless her argument is not conclusive, for while we have often felt as she does, nevertheless we have found certain suggestions which were of great help.

The original intention of music plots were for the use of the orchestra leader or those who were not specially adapted to improvisation or memorizing. Lone pianists or one man orchestra players who have had a great deal of experience in picture work and have sufficient memorized repertoire, can obtain very creditable results without the aid of so-called cue sheets, but this is not true when musical combinations or orchestras are used.

I can well wonder how difficult it would be for pianists or a one man orchestra player to set up a program from one of these lots, knowing that many of the numbers suggested are published for piano solo only in editions compiled for the use of scholars and not practical theatre work. It is surely impossible for any orchestra leader to get any commendable results unless there is some means whereby he may know the picture requirements.

No Musician Should Have Any Difficulty

No sane musician should have any difficulty whatsoever to set a musical program to the plots which appear in this department. We have always known that it was too much to expect that our readers should be familiar with the musical numbers that we suggest. Consequently we have added music notes at the bottom of each plot whereby we feel that we explain just what kind of number or what certain emotion or effect we expect to be obtained by the use of the number suggested. The numbers suggested in these plots are meant for the orchestra leader only. We know that many of these numbers cannot be obtained for piano solo. The lone pianist or one man orchestra player should, however, have little difficulty in making good substitutions after familiarizing himself with the explanations in music notes.

The music plot appearing this week is going to be played in twenty-eight theatres and I know that it will be played just as it appears in these columns.

We are only too glad to lend our assistance to any method or suggestions which may improve what we have at present. Until we know of a remedy, it is foolish to destroy that which we have. The music cues at present in vogue may be very faulty, but they do express one fact which should be appreciated by every capable musician, namely, that the producers of film are desirous of assisting the exhibitor to have better music for the picture.

Article on the Subject Ought to Follow

To improve these plots it is necessary that we have more such letters as the one from Miss Carrie Hetherington. While her letter includes me with all the rest who have made music plots or cues a hobby, nevertheless her communication was very gratefully received and we will be very glad to receive an article from Miss Hetherington, going more extensively into what she would feel would be of more assistance to the picture player.

MAMMOTH NEW ORGAN FOR POPULAR PITTSBURGH THEATRE

Peter Demas, proprietor of the Minerva theatre in Pittsburgh, has made a contract with one of the big organ companies for the installation of a $12,000 organ. It will be the latest thing in musical instruments and will embody all of the latest ideas in organ construction beside being one of the finest in this section of the country in a motion picture theatre.

With the completion of the organ the Minerva theatre management has arranged for special musical programs daily. These will be conducted by one of the best organists in this part of the state. The Minerva theatre uses the Paramount program exclusively.

Notes.—In music plots each reel of film is divided into 10 units of time, each unit being denoted by one X representing about 1½ minutes. Consequently, when a number is designated by XX it plays about 3 minutes, XXXX about 6 minutes, etc. When no X appears after musical description it means that the number is very short and does not play a minute or more. When cues to stop numbers are in quotation "——" it means that the cue is reading matter or sub-title. All other cues are action on screen. All segues should be made quietly and clean. When quick segues or abrupt stops are necessary it will be mentioned in Cues or Notes. When the time of each 1,000 ft. of film is less than 15 minutes there will appear less than 10 X's in each reel. To get the correct time of projection for each reel, multiply the number of X's appearing in each reel by 1½.

Effect Notes.—During No. 11, pistol shot effects are good. During Nos. 17, 20 and 22, the usual melodramatic effects suggested on the screen should be followed. Storm effects are essential in No. 22.

Music Notes.—Care should be taken that the numbers used for Nos. 5 and 8 have the known religious suggestion. Church songs should, however, not be used. No. 1 should be a medium slow number played legato and suggesting the romantic. No. 2 should be a light descriptive number of intermezzo style. No. 3 should be a 4/4 number with a romantic appeal. This number should not be a slow or draggy one. No. 4 should be a slow waltz lento movement played legato. No. 5 should be a slow number of pathetic appeal and should have a light suggestion bordering on the religious. No. 7 should be a slow number of pathetic appeal and positive dramatic effect. No. 8 should be similar to 5. The pathetic appeal is, however, necessary. No. 9 is similar to 4. No. 10 should be very slow legato number positively suggesting the dramatic in music. Nos. 12 and 13 are similar to 7. No. 15 is similar to 7. No. 16 should be a waltz movement played legato and not too slow. No. 19 must be a positive dramatic number of agitated and mystical effect. The number suggested is the best that I know of. No. 20 should be an agitato movement of some length. This number plays very long. Nos. 6, 11, 14, 17, 18, 21, 22 and 23 are short melodramatic numbers and highly essential to the screen action. The organ can be very appropriately used throughout this entire picture.

Building and Furnishings

Olympia, New Haven, Conn., Is Temple of Picture Art

Theatre Seats 2500, Is Handsomely Furnished and Is Equipped with All Up-to-Date Appliances for Comfort and Convenience of Its Patrons—Floors Are Concrete and Thickly Carpeted—Performances Are Continuous and Prices Range from Ten to Thirty-five Cents

A THEATRE up-to-date in every respect is the Olympia, New Haven, Conn. It is fireproof, with every safety appliance that human ingenuity can devise; a theatre handsomely appointed, with every known comfort and convenience, even luxury, perfectly adapted to every requirement.

The building is of solid brick, steel and concrete construction. It occupies a large tract of land, formerly the site of an old revolutionary homestead, in the very business center of the city and in the heart of the college district. A separate wing fronts on Temple Street, and contains the lobby and two stores on the ground floor and the theatre offices above. The theatre proper runs at right angles with the lobby, looking to an immense stage opening directly upon Crown Street. This part of the building itself is very tall, and has an appearance of added height from a huge water tank on the roof, supplying a patent sprinkler system. There are eighteen fire exits, properly designated with illuminated signs and easily accessible from all parts of the house. One hundred and twenty tons of steel were used in the construction of the building, and in rendering it absolutely safe.

The lobby is beautiful with a rich simplicity. It is finished in old brown, with mosaic tile floor, and is amply provided with set-in poster display frames. In the very center, almost at the edge of the sidewalk, is a large ticket-booth, circular in form, provided with all of the latest ticket-dispensing accessories and with accommodations for two clerks at one time. There are three sets of plate glass doors in the lobby, which opens directly into the theatre proper. In the lobby are also stairways leading to the second or balcony floor, and there is also space for an escalator. There is only one balcony above the main floor. The house seats 2500 people comfortably.

The seating arrangements are so arranged that a perfect view of every part of the stage is gained. Then there is not a pillar or post in the house—the balcony being supported by huge steel cantilevers. The seats are unusually large and roomy—with metal backs and arms gilded, and heavily upholstered leather seats and back cushions. They were furnished by the American Seating Company. There is ample room between seats and rows for persons to pass one another without the slightest inconvenience, while of inestimable value in case of panic are the extraordinarily wide aisles, which open easily upon fire escapes and exits. The floors are of concrete and thickly carpeted, so that the heaviest footfall is absolutely deadened. Back of the last row of seats is a large open space, separated by a wooden wall-rail with upholstered top, and providing considerable standing room. Frequently since the opening of the theatre the space has been of use, every seat in the house being occupied.

On the ceiling is a magnificent reproduction of a Venetian sky—a masterpiece of the decorating art. The general color scheme is old rose and gold, tapestries, rugs, curtains, hangings, etc., being selected with most careful discrimination. The whole is harmoniously blended with the beautiful, rich brown of the woodwork, and decidedly pleasing to the eye.

The technical equipment of the Olympia is the finest obtainable. There is a large regulation asbestos booth, fitted with two Simplex projecting machines and every necessary appurtenance. Two operators work in shifts and being experts in their trade, give perfect projection. The screen is a Radium Gold Fibre and shows wonderfully clear pictures. But above all things is the organ.

This is by far the handsomest and best in the city. It is built along the lines of a cathedral organ, with pipes showing on both sides of the stage. It is fitted with various traps and devices, so that practically any sound can be reproduced. To convey an impression of its size, it may be said that it required three sixty-foot baggage cars to haul the various parts to New Haven from Springfield, where it was built by the J. W. Steere and Son Organ Company. A famous organist presides over the instrument.

The acoustics are perfect, and it is possible to hear the faintest spoken word in every part of the house. Dean Wallace Sabine, of Harvard, an international authority on acoustics, designed the felts. The decorations in the theatre are by Pennell, Gibbs & Quiring, of Boston.

The Olympia is primarily a motion picture theatre, showing only Paramount pictures and the best of features from a few selected programs. But there is also vaudeville, and the arrangements for "legit" are perfect and complete. The stage is monstrous—by far the largest in the city—and is fitted with every appliance known to the art. The scenery is operated by a counter-weight system and the most scientific method of shifting now in use. The drops are beautiful and the lighting system a marvel of up-to-dateness. There is every comfort and convenience for the stage hands, and there are a number of well furnished dressing rooms for actors in the basement.

The lighting of the theatre is superb, and the heating and ventilating systems are the wonder of persons acquainted with such lines. There is not a cooler house in Connecticut, in summer, nor a warmer yet more airy in winter. The "air-washer" ventilating system is used for purifying the atmosphere.

There are two beautfully equipped ladies' rooms, large and well arranged gentlemens' lounge, a checking room of great capacity, and a public telephone room with several booths under care of an attendant. In fact everything that money could buy in the way of improvements for the comfort, convenience and safety of patrons, as well as their amusement, has been provided—and is being appreciated.

Performances are continuous from 1:30 to 10:30 P. M., and the prices range from ten to thirty-five cents. Each performance lasts about three hours. An excellent ten-piece orchestra plays in conjunction with the organ, furnishing beautiful and appropriate music for all pictures and acts.

WASSMAN TRANSFERS THE KNICKERBOCKER AND THE CRYSTAL, NASHVILLE, TO THE CRESCENT

A MOTION picture deal was recently closed in Nashville, Tenn., between the Crescent Amusement Company and W. H. Wassman, owner of the Knickerbocker and the Crystal theatres, whereby W. H. Wassman transferred to the Crescent Amusement Company his two moving picture theatres, the Knickerbocker, which is located on Capitol boulevard, and the Crystal theatre, located on Fifth avenue.

This deal having been closed, leaves the Cresent Amusement Company, or Sudekum interests, in virtually full control of the uptown moving picture theatres. Upon an investigation it was found that the Knickerbocker was rather heavily in debt, and one of the largest creditors was instrumental in engineering the deal whereby the theatre was transferred to the Crescent Amusement Company. The building is owned by a syndicate which is heavily interested in Sixth avenue property, and which built the Knickerbocker for Mr. Wassman in order to enhance values in that section. Mr. Wassman owned the fixtures, but owed about $30,000 on them.

After extended negotiations between owners of the building Mr. Wassman, his creditors and the Crescent Amusement Company, an agreement was reached whereby Mr. Wassman transferred the entire ownership of the Knickerbocker and the Crystal of Nashville and the Rex at Knoxville, all unincumbered, to the Crescent Amusement Company. In return Mr. Wassman received some stock in the Crescent Amusement Company, which was transferred to lift all encumbrances on the Knickerbocker fixtures. It was stipulated that Mr. Wassman should be retained at an agreed salary as manager of the Crystal and the Knickerbocker if he so desired.

The Crescent Amusement Company, already owned the Rex, Alhambra, Crescent, Fifth Avenue, Elite and Princess theatres, and by acquiring the Knickerbocker and Crystal theatres from Mr. Wassman, the big company will now have only one competitor in the central part of the city, the Strand, which passed back into the hands of Mr. Roy Shelton. Mr. Wassman is the pioneer moving picture man of Nashville, and his first theatre, the Crystal, has proved one of the best paying small houses in the country, it is said. The Knickerbocker, erected by him some months ago, was built at a cost of one hundred thousand dollars. Both the Knickerbocker and the Crystal theatres are union houses.

GREENVILLE, PA., THEATRE BOUGHT BY NEW COMPANY

THE Mercer Square theatre at Greenville, Pa., has changed hands. It has been taken over by the Schatz-Muntz Amusement Company, a corporation recently formed for the purpose of conducting motion picture theatres. The company has a capital stock of $25,000.

This company conducts the Photoplay and Lyceum theatres at Meadville, Pa., and has been dickering for several other theatres in that part of the state to add to its list. It is said the company also contemplates the erection of several other theatres in various towns in northwestern Pennsylvania.

The officers of the company are Charles Schatz, president; H. R. Muntz, treasurer, and H. P. Weir, secretary. Mr. Schatz will have charge of the bookings for all the theatres, and Mr. Muntz will be the house manager. A number of other houses will be added to the chain.

WESTERN SUPPLY CO. PROVIDES EQUIPMENT FOR OMAHA THEATRE

A SPECIAL meeting of the Oklahoma state board of arbitration, the fourth of the kind in the state's history, has been called to meet at Oklahoma City in an effort to settle the strike of the White Rats' (Actors) Union, stage hands, operators and musicians, now in its eighth week in Oklahoma City and Tulsa, and threatening in other cities of the Southwest. DIRECTORY OF NEW THEATRES

CALIFORNIA

THE Savoy theatre, a playhouse on McAllister street near Market, San Francisco, which has been sometime idle, is to be opened as a first-class motion picture house by James Beatty, the well-known proprietor of the Liberty theatre at San Jose. Mr. Beatty has had a great deal of experience in the business and has been very successful. Another thing in favor of the new location is that it is near the new Rialto and Imperial theatres on Market street, and as both of these are drawing overflow houses, each helps the other.

The fine new Reliance theatre at 17th and San Pablo avenue, in Oakland, opened recently to capacity houses. The theatre contains 1,800 seats.

CANADA

There have been quite a few changes in the management of the various theatres in Toronto, Ont., during the past month. J. Jenks formerly with the Photodrome theatre, is now in charge of the Empress. Manager Coulson of the Red Mill has gone to the Photodrome. The Crystal theatre of Orilla has been purchased by Mr. Tucker of the Princess theatre, while the Family theatre of Walkerville is now being managed by Mr. Pullan of Detroit. Mr. Edward Harris, formerly of the Star theatre, Cochrane, which was destroyed in the recent bush fires, is now in charge of the Empire theatre, Timmins.

The management of the Globe theatre of Toronto announce that they have acquired the old Griffins Hippodrome at the corner of Yonge and Shuter streets. This house which is being remodelled along the lines of the Globe theatre will be named the Rialto. A feature of the house will be the new pipe organ.

INDIANA

The Star theatre, Frankfort, located on South Main street, in the building formerly occupied by the Palace theatre, reopened recently, an admission price of five cents being charged. A specialty is made of comedy pictures. It is owned by the Star Theatre Company. The room has been redecorated and a new projection machine added to the equipment.

Romelia Bishop has bought the Dreamland theatre, Williamsport, from Louis Hayes.

N. W. Bryan of Princeton, proprietor of the Princeton News Agency, has bought the Yale theatre, Princeton, from William Lightner. The theatre has been renamed the Princess theatre. Mr. Bryan, who already has taken charge of the theatre, is an experienced motion picture show man, having operated a picture show at Rockport for nine years, before moving to Princeton. The building has been remodelled and repainted and is one of the most up-to-date in the town.

The Strand theatre, Lafayette, which has been closed during the summer, reopened September 4.

New and up to date flood lights have replaced the old lights in the new Fowler theatre, Delphi.

Tapp and Spray, who recently leased the opera house at Rockville, plan to run five reels of pictures for five cents each Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights. The name of the opera house has been changed to the Rex theatre.

Mike Maas and Jesse Page, of Mt. Vernon, have bought the Empress motion picture theatre in that city from Hayes and Hurley and already have taken possession. Mr. Maas has had charge of the Colonial theatre, Mt. Vernon, for some time. Mr. Page is agent for the Adams Express Comapny at Mt. Vernon.

Clyde Palmer, who recently sold the Edgerton theatre, Hicksville, to Edgerton parties, is considering a position as manager of the moving picture department of the Huber Opera House at Hicksville.

The Orpheum theatre, Fort Wayne, has been sold to the Bankers and Merchants Theatre Company, a syndicate of Chicago business men. The Orpheum is the first of a string of theatres which the syndicate plans buying, options being held on six other theatres at present. Albert F. Brentlinger, manager of the Orpheum, will become general manager of the new company as soon as the plans of the combine are perfected. G. W. Mason, who has been associated with Mr. Brentlinger in the management of the Orpheum, will become manager of the house. The purchase price is said to have been $35.000.

Five women were injured in a fire at the Princess theatre, 858 South Meridan avenue, Indianapolis, on September 8. The fire started in the operating booth being caused by an electric spark which caught some of the film. The fire spread to the front of the building through a ventilator. At no time was the theatre in danger. About 200 persons were in attendance at the time. The theatre is under the same managemnt as the Royal, 16 West Market street.

IOWA

Miller and Ingalls is the new firm in charge of the Idle Hour at New Hampton. The theatre has been remodelled, a new front and lobby put in, with redecoration along the lower floor.

Ed Madigan has bought the Grand theatre at Cedar Falls. After redecorating it beautifully, he has opened with pictures.

When a Des Moines street car left the tracks, ran onto the pavement and crashed into the Grand Theater at the corner of East Sixth street and Grand avenue here recently, nine persons were injured and a panic among 500 persons in the theatre ensued. The motorman of the car lost control of it at the top of a hill five blocks distant and the accident was the result. Had the car left the track on the curve near the theatre instead of a straightaway, it is estimated that a large number of persons would have been killed. As it was the spectators were jarred from their seats by the impact and the front of the show house demolished.

The Pastime theatre at West Branch, after being the poperty of Messrs. Crook and Myers for some time, was recently sold to Delbert Fairall, who took immediate possession.

J. J. Fay, formerly proprietor of the Play House at Cambridge, recently announced that Paul Turgeon had taken over his property.

After being closed during the summer months, the Delphus at Clarinda has been reopened by James Ells, formerly an exhibitor at Maryville, Mo.

The Fad theatre at Menlo has been reopened after three dark months on account of hot weather. The proprietor, L. W. Harkins, announces that he has booked Paramount service exclusively.

MAINE

William Williamson of the Colonial theatre, Augusta, and also interested in the Augusta Opera House, has taken over the opera house at Belfast. Mr. Williamson is a grandson of the late U. S. Senator Burleigh.

MASSACHUSETTS

Further improvements are hinted at for the Old South theatre on Washington street, Boston. The admission price has been raised to fifteen and ten cents evenings, and manager Frank L. Collier is running a double bill the first three days of the week, having taken on Metro in addition to Triangle, the result being increased business. There is a new corps of ushers and a new pipe organ.

Messrs. Lourie closed their Beacon theatre Sunday night, September 10, to reopen September 25, after a thorough renovation, when, they state, there will be nothing to beat it in Boston. There will be the latest thing in pipe organs installed, and about $50,000 expended, all told. The policy of the house has been changed, five reel pictures replacing the short subjects. The admission prices will be raised.

Stanley Sumner, formerly manager of the Fenway, Boston, is now located at the Olympia, in Lynn.

MICHIGAN

The Fuller Claflin Company, of Detroit, has prepared plans for J. M. Neal for remodeling the old Theatorium building and an adjoining structure into a large motion picture house. It will seat about 1,000. The cost will be $40,000.

MISSOURI

The Cinderella theatre, on Iowa and Cherokee streets, St. Louis, has been redecorated while it was closed for the summer season, and 500 box seats added, which now makes the seating capacity of the house reach 3,000. A large portico has also been built over the entrance, and that also adding to the appearance of the theatre. The box seats will be twenty cents, and the rest of the house ten. The orchestra has been increased to eight pieces, with the addition of a flute, a saxophone and a 'cello. Harry and Eugene Freund, who operate the Cinderella, also control the Favorite and the Cherokee theatres, both in South St. Louis, and all three of the houses were scheduled to open for the fall season on September 25.

Fred Wehrenberg, proprietor of the Best theatre, 3340 S. Jefferson avenue, St. Louis, has sold his grocery store and meat market, which he was operating in addition to his theatre, and will now devote his entire time to the exhibiting of pictures. Mr. Wehrenberg was the president of the St. Louis Exhibitors' League for a term recently, and he is still one of the most enthusiastic and interested members, and always attends the weekly meetings. Mr. Wehrenberg has discovered that his patrons are very partial to serials, and he keeps as many as four a week on his program. Those now running are "Liberty," "Beatrice Fairfax," "The Mysteries of Myra" and "The Iron Claw."

Mrs. L. B. Stoddard, proprietor and manager of the Monroe theatre, 2816 Chippewa street, St. Louis, has had a new stage built in the house with ornamental scenery, making a fine setting for her screen, which makes the house look like the most modern of theatres. Mrs. Stoddard has been operating the Monroe Airdome, just around the corner from the theatre all summer, and will open the house in a week or so.

The Vandora theatre, on Cherokee street near Jefferson, St. Louis, which has aways been a five-cent house, has recently adopted the plan of giving five or six-reel features on three nights of the week, raising the price of admission to ten cents on those nights. Charles Renzow, the manager, now regrets the fact very much that he did not try that scheme several months ago, as it has proved very popular, and has been the cause of augmenting the orchestra, and the addition of several items of improvement in the house for the convenience of the patrons.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Fred Cranlin of Randolph, Vt., has taken over the Lyric theatre at Lebanon, succeeding Mrs. Kate Brock, who had it for the past four years.

NEW YORK

The Palace Annex, a moving picture theatre at the northeast corner of St. Nicholas avenue and 174th street, New York City, has been leased to the National City Amusement Enterprises, which operates the theatre at the southeast corner of 176th street and St. Nicholas avenue.

STRAND ADVERTISING

Here's the way the Strand Theatre, Chicago's famous North Side theatre, advertises its attractions. The Strand management bought this Rawson & Evans electric sign after a thorough investigation. They bought the sign because it is striking, legible from any angle, and readable when not illuminated in the daytime.

They bought it because anyone can change the lettering in a jiffy. They bought it because its original cost is low, its current consumption negligible, and its bulb breakage nil. They bought it because it is the best sign on the market.

We make these signs double-faced, as shown, or single-faced for placing over the entrance. We have in stock, or will make for you, signs of any size for any picture theatre purpose.

Write your name and address on the margin of this page, send it to us, and we'll give you full particulars.

Not a matter of whether, But a matter of which

The program has won out over the catch-as-catch-can schedule, for the same reason that Gibbon gave for Rome's decline—Because it deserved to!

Gives you the greatest stars on earth in the greatest plays yet filmed.

But that's not all!

The Paramount Program establishes firmly for you a fixed cost, and without a definite knowledge of expenses an exhibitor builds on quicksand.

The Paramount Program protects you—you are not caught in a free for all struggle for patronage—you are not embarrassed by showing the same pictures at the same time that your competitors show them—you are not straining your program till it creaks by giving inferior productions. Every Paramount Picture moves a few steps ahead on the Highway of Achievement.

If they had to be shown to an audience of the Gods—as the Greeks believed they performed to—they could not be more complete, more artistic, more painstaking.

The Kind of Pictures You Want The Way You Want Them

GREATER Vitagraph has placed itself in a position where exhibitors are assured of two vital advantages:

Productions that are supreme in the field—incomparable in their seat-selling qualities.

A booking system so elastic as to meet the preference of every individual exhibitor.

This booking system is the broadest policy in the motion picture industry. It may be summed up in one sentence:

Pictures sold to you the way you want to buy them.

In other words, your own method of booking—that which your personal experience has proved makes for your individual best interests—is the way we want to sell pictures to you.

Could any plan be fairer—more ideal?

"The Scarlet Runner"

No serial has ever been launched supported by a publicity effort of such gigantic scope as that which has been placed back of "The Scarlet Runner."

Already thirty of the foremost newspapers of America have arranged to print each of the twelve episodes of this production, serially, and the list is yet far from being completed.

In addition, scores of papers in cities of lesser size will be supplied the serial by the Western Newspaper Union, serving over 6,000 publications in this country.

The story of a man who loved his neighbor as himself

The hawk and his prey.

Barney Bernard is indeed a master of human emotions. As "Abe Potash" and again in his first Vitagraph photoplay, "Phantom Fortunes," his characterizations were all good-natured humor. Now, in "A Prince in a Pawnshop," he sounds a deeper note, the agony of outraged parenthood—big, human appealing.

"The Country That God Forgot"

James S. McQuade in Moving Picture World says: "'The Country That God Forgot' tells the story of a man's great love for his wife, of that wife's nearly wrecking her own life and his by failing to understand her own heart, and of a loyal partner whose friendship is staunch and true in the face of death itself. . . . As much as has been written of Western life in this country, one cannot fail to be impressed that the story is different from any that has been read and that it grips strongly at the elemental life that is in each of us."

"The Country That God Forgot"

William C. Esty, 2nd, in Motion Picture News, writes: "'The Country That God Forgot' is one of those rare features that practically every Exhibitor, catering to any class of patrons, can book with the certainty of pleasing one hundred per cent of his audience. The story combines every element that makes for good entertainment, and each element is present in just the right proportion. Mr. Neilan tore a slice out of life itself and spread it raw on the celluloid. The cast is remarkable. The locations used are magnificent. The photography is good."

"The Country That God Forgot"

"A very unusual production with a very unusual ending."—Mr. Benson in Exhibitor's Herald. "An above the average Western."—Juanita Gray, Chicago Examiner. "A fine motion picture drama."—Genevieve Harris, Motography. "A noteworthy offering."—Luella O. Parsons, Chicago Herald. "There is no better frontier type than Thomas Santschi. He is ably supported by George Fawcett. The story is big and gripping. No one has ever surpassed it in a Western subject."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

L. H. Wilk, of the Crown Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, says:
"Nothing in my ten years' experience as an exhibitor has consistently done so well."

J. Miller, of the Empire Theatre, New Orleans, La., says:
"I run each chapter a solid week, but the patrons never tire of BILLIE BURKE."

H. E. Ellison, showing "GLORIA'S ROMANCE" at the American and Rex Theatres, Salt Lake City, Utah, says:
"This serial has attracted a nice added patronage."

Stanley V. Mastbaum, showing "GLORIA'S ROMANCE," at the Arcadia and Palace Theatres, Philadelphia, Pa., says:

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION. 68 EXCHANGES

OCTOBER 21, 1916

Demand for Varied Programs Answered In Mutual Libraries

THE problem of presenting a varied program is an extremely vital one to the exhibitor. The trend of the day is toward an evenly balanced program—one in which there is just the right proportion of smiles and tears. No theatre can be successful which presents nothing but comedies every day. And on the other hand theatre patrons soon become satiated with too much drama. The novelty film is always a welcome offering. The exhibitor who studies his patrons carefully, who seeks to cater to their likes and avoids the sort of pictures they dislike, who searches the market and books the productions that will enable him to vary his program, is the successful exhibitor. He knows the time spent in carefully selecting his program means money in his pocket, success for his theatre and satisfaction on the part of his patrons.

Vast Mutual Libraries.

Mutual exchanges are vast libraries from which the exhibitor can pick and choose. He can find, at any of the sixty-eight Mutual exchanges, vast stocks of dramas. He can find comedies of any length or style. He can discover novelties that will please his patrons. If it's powerful drama that he seeks, a shelf-full of William Russell Mutual Star Productions greets his eye. If he wants stories of Big Business and daring feats, the Helen Holmes Series will satisfy his wants. If he yearns for slap-stick comedy, surely he can be satisfied with a long list of Chaplin-Mutual Specials. A still different variety of pictures is his for the asking in the Kolb and Dill Series of Mutual Star Productions. As for the novelties—a glance over any of the Mutual Weeklies, the various issues of Reel Life or the "Seeing America First" and "Kartoon Komics" will prove a solution to his problem. Mary Miles Minter and Richard Bennett Mutual Star Productions have set an absolutely new standard in the way of multiple reel features. Florence Turner pictures are popular everywhere—Mutual has quantities of them in stock. Margarita Fischer and Harry Pollard have long been famous for their unusual offerings—a long series of films starring Margarita Fischer, is soon to be released by Mutual. It will pay any exhibitor to drop into his nearest Mutual exchange and look over the vast supply of unusual features that make up the Mutual libraries.

The Motion Picture News said,

"We Have An Idea That Every Exhibitor Who Caters To An Intelligent Audience Would Like To Gain A Reputation For Having Shown The Best Feature In A Year.— 'THE CONQUEST OF CANAAN'"

Variety, said,

"The Frohman Amusement Corporation's production of Booth Tarkington's novel 'The Conquest of Canaan,' scenario by Anthony Kelly, staged by George Irving; Ralph Dean, technical director, Wm. L. Sherrill, president; Harry Reichenbach, press representative, proves that one can produce a very good feature without resorting to huge spectacles or sensational melodrama. Mr. Tarkington's story is to well known to necessitate summarizing here, but equal credit is due the Frohman Company for having assembled so clever an aggregation of actors who proved so excellent as 'small town' types and served to visualize so forcibly the humorously sarcastic captions and titles. Almost everyone of them is deserving of individual mention. This aggregation is headed by Jack Sherrill and Edith Taliaferro. Miss Taliaferro was never sweeter on the screen and young Mr. Sherrill shows marked improvement as an artist over all previous appearances. He seems to have taken on more weight and dignity and his transition from a boy to the responsibilities of a man marks him as a coming screen favorite. 'The Conquest of Canaan' is a regular picture."

New York Evening Mail, said,

"George Irving seems to be one of the few directors who can transfer a successful novel to the screen without spilling any of its charm on the road. He filmed 'Jaffery' so nicely that we used a whole typewriter ribbon telling about it, and now he has made quite as much of a success with Booth Tarkington's story, 'The Conquest of Canaan.'

"This is the second production of the Frohman Company since it has been free-lancing, as it were. The first production was so out of the ordinary that one could hardly expect the same company to equal it so soon. 'The Conquest of Canaan' does equal it; it comes near surpassing it. The picture is wonderful. That is the only correct adjective.

"The story, of course, had the material with which the director could work. Tarkington tells good tales, and he develops his characters, supplies his atmosphere, and works up climaxes in a great style. But it takes a creative and understanding director to make these features convincing on the screen.

"From beginning to end of this picture there is not a single drop in interest, not a single technical flaw. And the story is one which will please all audiences.

"The cast would come in for the highest praise had we more space. Edith Taliaferro plays Ariel, and Jack Sherrill proves himself one of the very best juveniles in his role of Joe. The various types are well selected. The settings and photography are splendid."

The Motion Picture News, said,

"We have half an idea that every exhibitor who caters to an intelligent audience would like very much to gain a reputation for having shown the best feature in—say six months or a year. 'The Conquest of Canaan' is that feature, it might even be ventured that it is the feature. Considering it as a whole it represents the photo-drama at its best. It tells an excellently constructed story, in which there is no wasted incident and the story is of the human interest, red-blooded kind that gets under the skin and makes it tingle and thrill. There is no turning to your neighbor when the third reel is over with the remark, 'Good night! Are there three more reels of this?' The merit of 'The Conquest of Canaan' can not be measured by its footage."

Moving Picture World, said,

"Booth Tarkington offers many temptations to the film man and likewise many opportunities. It surely is not any easy thing to put subleties of a Tarkington story like this on the screen—but this effort has succeeded.

"The settings throughout were fine, the portrayal of the ludicrous types left nothing to be desired. Indeed the rich and punctuous humor, changing with biting wit, in which Tarkington abounds, were most skillfully transferred to the screen."

Dramatic Mirror, said,

"The film of a well known novel is an experiment frequently attended with dire results, an assertion well proved by numerous failures of pictures founded on such basis in the past. In many cases the story is either unrecognizable through the liberties taken with its plot, or loses its appeal simply because the plot was altogether unfit for screen purpose in the first place. Therefore when success crowns such an effort, it is an event to be marked with a red letter in motion picture annals. In the latter happy category belongs 'The Conquest of Canaan.' The book itself was a delight to lovers of good literature, the picture promises to win even a greater number of admirers.

"Considered as a screen subject it is one of the best features produced this season. Brilliant comedy, laughter-producing subtitles, clever acting, accentuating humor and pathos to the steenth degree; photography of the highest grade—all combine to make this film, in the words of the poet—'a thing of beauty and a joy forever." It is the sort of a picture admirably well calculated to discomfit the pessimists who would fain persuade the public that artistic screen productions with a real human heart interest are no longer to be looked for."

Morning Telegraph, said,

"The director makes human interest play a large part and has turned out a production that meets the requirements for first class screen entertainment."

The Billboard, said,

"'The Conquest of Canaan,' produced by the Frohman Amusement Company, is taken from the well-known novel by Booth Tarkington, which ran into the huudreds of thousands of copies, and is regarded as one of this popular author's best stories. Lovers of the book will find that the same charm which it holds has been transferred to the screen faithfully in every respect. Technically it is well handled the titles are particularly clear, and the story abounds in that elusive quality atmosphere. The characters of a small town have been faithfully reproduced, the respectable judge and his family as well as the busybodies that sit around the hotel office and decide national issues. Jack Sherrill entered into the spirt of the thing, and was a very lively and likable news-boy lawyer. Edith Taliaferro, as Ariel Tabor, is cast in a role which gives her splendid opportunity to show her ability. The supporting cast was excellent, and Director Ralph Dean and George Irving, who staged it, are deserving of much credit. The picture has entertaining value above the average, and it leaves a lasting and pleasing impression."

NEW YORK EVENING MAIL, Said

"OUR ROLL OF HONOR 'The Conquest of Canaan'"

I note with a great deal of gratification that the members have marked their Ballots returned. Indicating that "The Conquest of Canaan" should be placed on the selected list which is sent to Exhibitors and Organizations interested in better Films.

Every { Man / Woman / Child / Horse / Dog } Loves Bill (w.s.) Hart

And when it is known that he is going to appear at your theatre in his latest Triangle Play

"The Return of 'Draw' Egan"

you wont have to do any coaxing to get the crowds coming, but it may be necessary for you to run extra performances to satisfy the number who will surely want to see this great Hart Play.

TRIANGLE

RELEASES FOR WEEK OF OCTOBER 15

Sir Herbert Tree in "The Old Folks at Home," Triangle-Fine Arts

Now you are offered the opportunity of presenting to your patrons that famous English actor, Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, who without a doubt is the greatest stage star to appear on the screen. Knighted in England for his distinguished services to the drama, Sir Herbert has a world-wide reputation.

For years your patrons have heard of him, and now that they have an opportunity to see him in a Triangle Play few will miss the opportunity.

And this isn't just an ordinary picture. It's a strong, vital play that is built around one of the biggest emotional elements—the love of parents for their children. It touches the heart strings of everyone—parents and children alike. Written by the well-known American author, Rupert Hughes, the picture gives this prominent actor every opportunity to display his great ability.

There is no question but that this picture will be one of your biggest pullers.

W. S. Hart in "The Return of 'Draw' Egan" Triangle-Kay Bee

The value of W. S. Hart as a money getter needs no emphasis to the exhibitor. Past experience has proved that no star is more popular than this great screen actor. His personality seems to reach right down and "get" everyone, man, woman or child. They can't seem to help loving him even in his "bad-man" parts.

And that's the kind of a part he has in "The Return of 'Draw' Egan," a speedy, breezy, western drama in which Hart takes the part of a sheriff quick on the "draw," always with a chip on his shoulder and ready to fight at a moment's notice—until the little girl captures him for her very own. It's a typical Hart play, just full of that stirring action which the public loves.

We don't have to tell you how this picture will be accepted.

Are You the Best Exchange Man in Your Territory?

As the official representative of the British War Office and Admiralty, I have been commissioned to arrange for the broadcast exhibition throughout the United States of the greatest battle film ever published. To secure maximum results I must have the assistance of the best exchange man in every territory. Are you that man?

(FIVE REELS)

A vivid picture of history in the making. Actual battle in all-devouring progress. Moving, breathing, living pictures of the titanic struggle of the Allies to redeem the shell-bitten lands of Northern France and Belgium. This picture actually shows what the greatest writers have tried, vainly, to express.

Aside from its historic value, this picture is the

because it is replete with human interest. It is the only film ever taken of an ACTUAL BATTLE IN FIERCE PROGRESS, showing the TERRORS, HORRORS and MISERY OF WAR.

Kitchener's Great Army

(4 Reels)

Portrays the most stupendous feat in the history of the World, turning 5,000,000 civilians into a highly efficient army in eighteen months.

These pictures carry with them the greatest latent publicity value in existence today. Menaced as this nation is by the WORLD WAR and the MEXICAN SITUATION, every thinking American Citizen is intensely interested in just what war means. These films show them. Every element that makes for success is offered. In these subjects you have two great features—combined they make the greatest super-feature ever produced. It merely requires the man who can take advantage of OPPORTUNITY.

Again I ask you ARE YOU THE MAN?

Small House and Short Film

IN these days of the big picture and the big star, let us not overlook the small picture theatre and its requirements.

Let us also not overlook the fact that the small house still makes up the backbone of this business. Of the fifteen million people whose daily admissions keep the great wheels of the industry oiled a very large proportion indeed are small town folk attending small picture theatres.

Are we catering enough to the requirements of these people?

IT is significant to note that seven thousand towns and cities in this country have motion picture theatres. On an average then there are only about two theatres to a town. If we take out but the large cities and with them over two thousand theatres, the average is still less. It indicates strikingly, at any rate, the great preponderance and therefore the importance of the small community theatre.

And it further indicates the positive business necessity of having clearly and constantly in mind the requirements of these thousands of houses and their audiences.

THESE millions of theatre patrons are not so situated as we who live in a metropolis. We can pick our entertainment with little trouble. The choice is right before us. We can go to drama and vaudeville; we can view big pictures and short pictures. We have varied opportunities in this respect.

But the separate and small community has to rely on one or two theatres—generally on one—for all that it wants to see in pictures.

NOW it is idle to suppose that these people want the same sort of diet all the time. They want variety. This variety will include here and there a big production, a big star—provided the theatre's small seating capacity can meet the booking expense—and features. But the five reels of each day's show throughout the year must include a wide variety of subjects and to meet this situation it is plain arithmetic that the short length picture is a fundamental and broad necessity.

Do our studios and the industry in general sense this need, or are we seeing too big?

A PROMINENT British buyer is here looking for short length pictures. He reports an active market abroad for such pictures and a scarcity of production here.

And a survey of demand made recently by a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS among the exhibitors of the great Middle West indicates clearly that the mixed program rules a favorite in the smaller towns and that short pictures are consequently in wide demand.

"I wish," said one exhibitor, "that the manufacturers had more one-reel brain writers."

"ALL very well," said a manufacturer to whom this statement was quoted, "but the exhibitor doesn't know our production difficulties. The writers want to write features, the stars want to act in them, the directors want to produce them.

"Only two of our directors are willing—they are even anxious—to produce short length subjects, and they are our most capable and far-seeing; we need them on features. As for the stars, we can do nothing with them. They simply will not act in short subjects."

UNDOUBTEDLY the same situation prevails quite generally today. But we believe that one of the next moves taken by the industry will be a decided reversion to the short subject.

After all the feature is simply the more ambitious photoplay. We keep on rating it by its length, whereas that is not its real measure. Many and many a feature is being released today which is only a short subject spun out to make length, in the belief that the market clamors for features.

THESE subjects should be made short and in time they will be, after we have agreed that the short subject deserves all the care in preparation and all the honors in presentation accorded to the feature.

The point is simply this: Some theatres want features; some theatres want short subjects; some want both.

IN the mad scramble of the past three years all kinds of pictures have been produced by one hand, distributed by one hand, and all theatres have rushed into the indiscriminate exhibition of them.

As the business grows older we shall have a sharper classification. Producers will specialize more and more in each class of subject and there will be a similar specialization in distribution. Also the public will know in advance where to find what they want, because theatres will more and more find their audiences and buy for them.

BUT the warning to manufacturers is pertinent today. Are they seeing too big? Are they seeing only the big theatre, the big audience, the big production?

Book These Pictures of President Wilson and Candidate Hughes

EXHIBITORS will do well to book the news weeklies carrying pictures of the two Presidential candidates which were secured at Shadow Lawn and the Essex County Country Club last week during the interviews with representatives of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

THE pictures are excellent. The cameramen state that they are the best thus far taken of each candidate.

It is our understanding that all the news weeklies will have these pictures. The Shadow Lawn pictures of President Wilson were taken only by the Animated Weekly, but we learn that the Universal Film Company is loaning the negative to the other weeklies and not requiring that credit be given.

SUBTITLES are to be inserted, dealing with censorship. Exhibitors who run these pictures can rest assured they are acting not only in their own best interests but also those of their audiences.

The Presidential Candidates and Federal Censorship

THE week past has been one of great profit to the industry in its opposition to official censorship. A very clear light seems to be breaking through the clouds at last.

PRESIDENT Wilson and Presidential Candidate Charles E. Hughes have indicated, to the complete satisfaction of the motion picture men who heard them, their presumption against the principle of censorship and its legalized application.

EX-GOVERNOR HUGHES made very clear two very important points in his informal treatment of the subject last Saturday.

We have talked a good deal within the industry about censorship on one hand and regulation of films on the other. Evidently Mr. Hughes construes regulation as police control. Also he indicated, in the minds of his hearers, that local control would exist whether or not we had Federal Censorship. He questioned outright the need of the latter.

ONE might quote the speaker still more definitely on these points except for his request in the matter. But there is much food for thought in his straightforward declaration and coming as it does from a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, its weight and meaning are not to be questioned.

TAKING both men by their measure, one is inclined to be very confident that there will be no Federal Censorship laws whichever heads the coming administration.

Plea for Single Reel Interest in Multiples—"Simplicity and Shadowland"

IN line with the foregoing editorial on "The Small Theatre and the Short Picture," the attitude of the layman is very well set forth in the following editorial from the Omaha Daily News, entitled "Simplicity in Shadowland":

"IF a layman might be permitted to make a suggestion with regard to the movies, we would humbly submit for the consideration of the film magnates the statement that they are seeing too big.

"On the legitimate stage there has been a reaction against the large, costly productions overloaded with tinsel and froth and short on plain, straight sense. The 'little theatre' is the result of this reaction. With its simplicity of equipment and its physical restrictions upon the size of both audience and company, the little theatre places the accent upon the ideas of the play itself.

"IT seems as if there were a hint here for the film play—which is none the less drama because it is silent and which is therefore subject to the same canons of criticism and the same necessity for making good with its patrons out in front.

"EVERY Omaha Daily News movie patron has had the experience of going to see a heavily advertised star in a feature film and of extracting more enjoyment out of a little one-reeler thrown in without announcement to fill out the program. There has been so much of imposing 'purpose,' such a heavy accent upon the moralizing, such an obvious striving for a 'lesson' in some of the big productions, that it becomes a strain to view them.

"IN contrast, the little one or two-reeler, with its straightforward naturalness and simplicity, seems as welcome as the singing of birds after a thunderstorm.

* * *

"We suggest, still as a layman, that the next profitable development in the multi-reelers will take account of the charm that the single reels have never lost."

President Wilson Against Principle of Censorship

Attitude of Chief Magistrate When He Received Committee Representing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, at Shadow Lawn, Indicates His Belief in Freedom of the Screen—Brady Introduces Irwin, Who Presents Briefly Strong Arguments Against Legislative Efforts to Handicap Business

PRESIDENT WILSON, at Shadow Lawn, October 3, received a special committee representing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and heard many interesting facts regarding the growth and operation of the industry and something of the obstacles which it is combating for a free and uncensored expression. His expression, given with certain reservations, sent away the motion picture men entirely satisfied with the conference.

He met his visitors in the billiard room of the white mansion, and William A. Brady, President of the Association, introduced Walter W. Irwin, of the Greater Vitagraph, Chairman of the Executive Committee, who briefly presented the case of the motion picture industry.

"In behalf of the motion picture industry, permit me to express our appreciation of your consideration and courtesy in granting to us this privilege," said he. "The picture in motion has become one of the most, if not the most, important mediums of thought transmission.

"Twenty millions of people in the United States daily view the motion picture. To them it has become the chief means of entertainment and education. Five hundred millions of dollars are invested in this industry, and our employees number nearly a milllion. And yet the very existence of the industry, together with the fundamental principles of our democratic institutions are threatened by the un-American principle of censorship.

To Protect the People

"As a result the industry has at last organized for its own protection and for the protection of the American people. It now possesses a National Association comprising representatives of every branch of the industry, and many of those who do business with one or more of the branches.

"Today the industry, through this Association, stands as a unit against the principle of censorship. In Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kansas and Maryland, censorship statutes exist, by which we are compelled to submit our product, prior to publication, for the approval or disapproval of a political board.

"Next winter, 38 state legislatures meet, and it is our information that this industry is to be the chief target of various small minorities who seek to determine what their brothers shall see or think.

"Last Winter a similar censorship bill, known as the Hughes Bill, was introduced into Congress and approved by a majority of the Educational Committee. It is our understanding that this bill will be reintroduced at the next session of Congress. If the Hughes Bill is passed and signed, and if similar procedure is taken in a number of the various states, we will virtually be legislated out of existence.

"We do not seek privilege. We desire only the same liberty enjoyed in this country by the press, the drama, art and other mediums of thought transmission; but with full responsibility for our acts. We seek to obtain our day in court—equal rights under the law.

"Last Winter we had introduced in Congress an amendment to the Federal Penal Code, which would impose heavy penalties for the transportation in Interstate Commerce of any improper film. This amendment failed of passage.

"We recognize our full responsibility to the people, and we want to be held strictly accountable. What we ask, Mr. President, is an expression from the President, of his views upon the principle of censorship which we deem so important, not only to ourselves, but to the people.

"We know that with your love for American freedom, you cannot countenance censorship in this country, and we likewise know that an expression from the President will go a long way towards preventing the reintroduction of the Hughes Bill and of similar bills in the 38 states whose legislatures meet next winter."

Wilson Against Principle of Consorship

The attitude and utterances of President Wilson plainly indicated that to his way of thinking the presumption was against the principle of censorship, and that an overwhelmingly strong case would have to be made out in favor of censorship before his support could be enlisted for it.

The motion picture delegation felt from the President's manner and his informal observation on the subject in the event of future legislative action in relation to moving pictures that he would extend a guiding hand—a hand of entire justice to the industry. It was also manifest that the President fully recognized the danger of serious abuses consequent upon the arbitrary exercise of private judgment, where public judgment alone ought to sway the matter.

The President's words indicated that he believed if you have a friend whom you think is a fool you should let him hire a hall and permit the public to be the judge. Throughout the impression gained by the delegation was that President Wilson could not see how censorship could be considered safe since it is so largely a matter of taste, environment and prejudice. The President intimated that he found himself frequently shocked by things which others were able to digest with ease and vice versa. In brief, that it is all a matter of personal equation.

The delegation was composed of William Brady, W. W. Irwin, P. A. Powers, Carl Laemmle, J. H. Hallberg, William L. Sherrill, W. Stephen Bush, William A. Johnston, Fred Hawley, "Wid" Gunning, Frederick H. Elliott, L. P. Rogers, B. N. Busch, Adam Hull Shirk and W. K. Whipple of the Animated Weekly, Samuel Trigger of the Tremont Theatre, New York, and Henry Branson Varner, Secretary of the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

After the conference the President and the delegation were caught by the news camera on the broad porch, Mr. Wilson meanwhile keeping up a running talk regarding the mysteries of the motion picture, and at one interrogation caused a general laugh in which he heartily joined. The news picture expert, who has taken previous "shots" at the President, declared that he had secured the best animated, merry-mooded picture of the Democratic candidate that has ever been filmed. This film, together with sub-titles, will be issued immediately by all the news weeklies and it is believed will enjoy a large circulation throughout the country. Exhibitors everywhere should book it.

Delegation of Picture Men See Hughes

Presidential Candidate Receives a Large Number of Film Men in New Jersey and Expresses His Views on the Question of Censorship

PRESIDENTIAL Candidate Hughes received a large delegation of motion picture representatives on the lawn of the Essex County Country Club, New Jersey, last Saturday, October 7.

In response to the presentation by W. W. Irwin of the censorship situation, Mr. Hughes made a thoughtful, well-rounded address which clearly evidenced not only his full appreciation of the motion picture and its sphere and also his clear insight into the principle of censorship and the proposition of a Federal censorship law.

On certain major points of the censorship controversy Mr. Hughes was definite and illuminative. His hearers would like to quote him word for word, and it seems unfortunate that his concise and conclusive utterances cannot go forth and clear up the cloudy situation favoring government censorship. Only the following statement was given out to the press:

"Mr. Hughes drew the distinction between reasonable regulation in the interest of health and morals and the broad principle of censorship in advance of publication, which was open to serious abuses. The impression gained by members of the national association from the remarks of Mr. Hughes was that while he thoroughly believed in protecting public morals by proper regulations he was not inclined to favor the principle of such censorship; that such censorship must necessarily be viewed with misgivings as history has proved that it leads to arbitrary action.

"Mr. Hughes impressed all with the idea that Federal censorship would in no way affect or control state or local censorship as to local productions and that he was opposed to any Federal action which could not be justified by Federal exigency. He added that, of course, he could not properly foreclose himself upon questions of this nature."

The motion picture representatives were guests at luncheon of Everett Colby, former State Senator in New Jersey, and all expressed great appreciation of his hospital-

National Board Strong Against Censorship

In a Lengthy Statement Sent to President Wilson and Charles E. Hughes Prove by Actual Census That Federal Censorship Would Not Do Away with Local or State Censorship—Ardent Plea for the Motion Picture as a Free Form of Expression

THE following statement regarding Federal censorship has been sent to President Wilson and Hon. Charles E. Hughes by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures:

"The censorship question is a vital one. The problem is to provide something that will satisfy the tastes of individuals in all parts of the country. In the effort to do this more than one device for establishing standards has been suggested. The latest is a Federal censorship board or commission controlling through the transportation of films in inter-state and foreign commerce. What effect will this device, if adopted by Congress, have upon the activity of local groups, official and otherwise, attempting to censor for a given community? Would it be as good as a body of volunteers such as The National Board of Review, which controls through its broad point of contact and its advisory character?

"With the object of securing a definite expression of opinion from those most directly concerned officially with the point of view of the public in the question of Federal censorship of motion pictures, The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures recently sent a questionaire to the mayors of a number of cities in different parts of the country.

"The replies represent the views of the chief executives of cities as far apart as Portland, Me., and Pasadena, Cal., and St. Paul and Minneapolis and Baton Rouge.

"Only one replied that he would be willing to eliminate the responsibility from local officials, while four-fifths of the total number said they would not. Opinion was more divided regarding the extent to which a Federal Board of Censorship would satisfy the various elements of a given community. There was strong objection to the idea of limiting the right of each locality to take action for itself should public opinion be against the decision of the proposed Federal Board. With the exception of two mayors, who gave no direct answer, all said they would not permit a film objectionable to their communities to be shown, even if it had been passed by the proposed Federal Board.

"Fighting as it is for the improvement of films along refining and artistic lines, The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures naturally is interested in the question of Federal censorship. There are two angles from which the motion picture industry should be viewed. One is commercial, the other relates to the film as a medium of expression. It is the latter, of course, in which The National Board is primarily interested.

"The film may be classed with the press, free speech and the drama. No one thinks for a moment of attempting to control these mediums of expression by means of legally established commissions. It would be dangerous in a democracy to do so, not only because of the possibility of corrupt use by politicians, but also because the public has a right to determine for itself what it desires within the bounds of decency and the social welfare.

"The experience of The National Board of Review, covering several years, is that it is not practicable to meet the peculiar tastes of all parts of the country from one point. It is obvious that there are pictures which could not be shown in the Southern States, to which there would be no objection in the Northern States, and that what New York City wants may not be such as would suit the taste of the market center of the agricultural district in the Middle West.

"Those who seek Federal censorship do so in the hope that it will eliminate once for all local censorship. The questionaire sent to the mayors of cities throughout the country by The National Board of Review indicates that they would almost unanimously continue to feel a responsibility for the character of pictures shown in their communities and act accordingly, even if there were Federal censorship. Governors of several states have declared that they would not feel bound by Federal regulation.

"Moreover, every one acquainted with the operation of Federal bureaus knows the tendency is to standardize functions. This would be fatal in the case of motion pictures, for if a serious effort were made to censor films the result in the long run would be that films would become standardized and no longer interesting. We have great faith in the possibilities of the motion picture as a medium of expression. It would be almost impossible to secure the repeal of the censorship law once it got on the statute books."

"The Voice of Love" and "Bluff" Will Come from Mutual in the Week of October 16

THE regular release of Mutual Star Productions for the week of October 16 will consist of "The Voice of Love," a drama featuring Winnifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen, and "Bluff," the third of the five-part drama releases of Kolb and Dill, the famous partners.

In "The Voice of Love," Winnifred Greenwood essays a new type of role, which is extremely becoming and well suited to the talents of the American favorite. She is a fortune teller—a fair and dashing widow, who, through the death of her husband, an officer in the army (whom she believes she had unintentionally murdered), is forced to earn her living and support her young daughter to the best of her ability.

The lady becomes enamored of a client, a wealthy young man, who, in turn, falls in love with her own daughter at a fete given in New York, where the charming girl is being educated.

The mother, unconscious of the fact that she is being thwarted in her love by her own child, gives way to bitter hatred, and plots the wreck and ruin of her rival's happiness.

The discovery of the true state of affairs in the nick of time averts the tragedy and awakens the mother to the realization that she really loves another man.

In the role of Violet, the boarding school teacher is Laura Sears. Edward Coxen plays the role of the woman's true friend. In the supporting cast are George Field and Harvey Clark.

The plot hinges on the discovery, alleged to have been made by Louie, janitor of the thirty-second floor of the highest building in New York, of the process for the transmutation of "base metals into gold."

Louie suddenly leaves town with the formula and becomes a respected partner of Mike, a small-time confectioner in Solemn town. Then a wealthy young New Yorker comes to town in his racer. His mad dash down the main street is stopped by the front wall of Mike's store, and when he wakes up he finds his head in the lap of the fair Claire, school teacher to the town, and the special protege of the old meddlers, Mike and Louie.

The setting then changes to Wall street, whither the wealthy young adventurer, Harold, takes Max and Louie with the latter's formula for making gold. What if the formula proves in the end to be nothing more than the recipe for the finest rubber cement on the market. Mike and Louie and Harold clean up an even five million, and Claire becomes the wife of the young millionaire for life.

On Tuesday, Winnifred Greenwood, Edward Coxen and George Field will appear in "The Franchise," a story of intrigue and underhanded dealings, both in love and in politics, which almost sends to ruin an honest man.

In the roles of two young lawyers, are Edward Coxen as the honest one, and George Field as the villain. Winnifred Greenwood takes the part of the sweetheart for whose favor the two young lawyers vie.

The name of Edwin August is added to the list of stars in the drama output of the Mutual Film Corporation for the week of October 16. Mr. August will appear in "The Law of Nature," a two-part drama, which will go to the public on Tuesday, October 18.

In the role of the sophisticated, cold woman of the world, who prefers society to his childless home, is Iva Shepard.

Ruth Blair plays the role of the simple maiden, who wins the husband's affections after his desertion by his wife has cut him free from his marriage vows. William Bailey appears in the role of the villain.

The remaining drama for the week is "Looking Westward."

EFFECTIVE SCENE FOR JOAN SAWYER'S PICTURE

An orchestra engaged last week for Joan Sawyer's forthcoming William Fox release goes children one better, for it will neither be seen nor heard. Curiously enough, not a single member of this ten-piece orchestra will be visible on the screen when the picture is shown.

The men were stationed behind the camera, and their duty consisted in furnishing the strains to which the noted dancer performed her steps.

In this scene the heroine performs a dance on the table over a lighted piece of glass in the center. The contrivance gives a novel photographic effect, but when Director Tefft Johnson had this part of the film run off in the projection room, he discovered the entire scene would have to be re-taken.

The wire connection which supplied the current to the globe illuminating the glass, was visible, and it was necessary to change this if the effectiveness of the incident was to be retained.

Cameraman Gets Commission to Cover Pacific Coast

Eugene W. Castle of Gaumont Promoted on Account of Good Work Done for Mutual Weekly in San Francisco

EUGENE W. CASTLE was such a successful cameraman, having a highly developed nose for news, that he secured for San Francisco a larger representation than it had ever before in the Mutual Weekly. After watching his work for some time, the Gaumont Company has now decided to widen the opportunities by turning him loose on the Pacific Coast for "Reel Life" and "See American First." Mr. Castle's only instructions are to send in pictures that are suitable for these single reel releases. His roving commission permits him to travel from the Canadian border to Mexico, wherever water flows into the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. Castle has just left for Chicago and the far west, after having spent ten days at the Gaumont studios, Flushing, N. Y. While at the Gaumont headquarters he conferred with Pell Mitchell, his old chief, and the editors and directors of the two single reels which he will now represent.

In Chicago Mr. Castle will visit the main offices of the Mutual Film Corporation. He is planning to carry a complete photographic outfit while in the field, insuring excellent still pictures for publicity purposes, something highly appreciated by exhibitors as an advertising adjunct.

The San Francisco territory for the Mutual Weekly will now be covered by Bertin E. Moisant. In giving up his connection with the Mutual Weekly, which in San Francisco is known as the San Francisco Bulletin Edition, because of the weekly alliance with this newspaper, Mr. Castle said: "While it is with a great deal of regret that I give up San Francisco, I am very glad indeed to be associated with two such popular single-reel features as 'See America First' and 'Reel Life.' The Pacific Coast is an empire in itself, and I anticipate that I shall be kept at work indefinitely. The interest in this favored section of the United States has been heightened by the fairs at San Francisco and San Diego, and hundreds of thousands of people have returned to the east to spread the news among their friends. Hence I am sure that whatever Gaumont puts on the screen from the Pacific Coast will entertain out of all proportion to what it would have done even two years ago."

The Argentine Rights for "Civilization" Sold

Arturo Cairo of Buenos Aires Buys Pictures for Twenty Thousand Dollars—J. Parker Read to Tour All of South America to Dispose of Rights Throughout South America

TWENTY-THOUSAND DOLLARS has been paid for the Argentine rights of "Civilization." Mr. Arturo Cairo, of Buenos Ayres, the purchaser states: "I consider the money safely invested as after seeing all the big film productions in the United States during the past few weeks, I have chosen "Civilization" as the greatest because I think it will create a furore in the different South American countries."

Mr. Cairo represents one of the biggest film interests in South America and has exploited many great productions in his territory.

"Civilization" in the remaining South American republics, will be exploited by J. Parker Read, Sr., who has an intimate knowledge of the motion picture business in the countries he will visit, viz., Uruguay, Brazil, Venezuela, Ecuador, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Colombia, Panama, Honduras, San Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Guatemala.

Mr. Read, who will devote six months to the trip, has power and authority to register copyrights in the different countries he visits, and carries with him credentials from the embassies at Washington.

Monte Katterjohn Leaves Triangle for Essanay

Well-Known Writer to Take Complete Charge of Essanay Scenario Department and Prepare Scenarios for Henry Walthall—Change to Take Effect at Once

MONTE KATTERJOHN, who for more than a year has been affiliated with the Ince Triangle studio scenario department as author and adapter, departed this week for Chicago to take up a new position with the Essanay Company, where he will assume charge of the scenario department and production of all photoplays.

Katterjohn is a very successful scenario writer with a number of years' experience. His first work was as a free lance writer. His good stories attracted the attention of a large producing organization, and he was induced to take charge of the scenario department. Later he was with the Vitagraph Company, and following this had an engagement with the William Fox Film Corporation, where he wrote "The Broken Law" and others.

In the summer of last year he was contracted by Mr. Ince, and has specialized in writing scenarios for William S. Hart. Katterjohn's "Apostle of Vengeance" is said to be the most successful Hart picture, and exchange reports show it to be the biggest box office receipt builder the Triangle program has had.

Katterjohn is also author of "The Captive God," "The Patriot," and "The Gun Fighter," all Hart subjects. He also wrote "Bobs O' the Blue Ridge," starring Bessie Barriscale, "'The Jungle Child," starring Dorothy Dalton, and has adapted "The Feminine Mind," "A Gamble In Souls," "Female of the Species," and others.

The safety vaults of the Ince studio contain other original stories by Katterjohn which have been accepted for production and will be filmed shortly. His last work at the Ince studio was to prepare the first starring vehicle for Enid Bennett, who Thomas H. Ince recently signed, and who this week began work at the Ince Culver City studios on her first production.

We're Not Going to Let This Happen If We Can Help It

Shelbyville, Ind., Oct. 2.

Mr. Wm. A. Johnston,
Motion Picture News,
Dear Sir:

Are you going to let the same crowd put over a trade paper and burden this industry with still more expense?

We have enough moving picture theatres to take care of all the motion picture business, and too many. We have enough manufacturers to manufacture all the film we need, and too many. We have enough trade papers, and if you try to wade through them you soon discover we have too many.

The point I want to make is this—that the more expense that is loaded on the manufacturer the more expense is loaded on to the exhibitor because in the long run we, the exhibitors, pay it all. It is time that we retrace and practice economy in this business and it has to start at the fountain head.

A film agent came into my office yesterday and said, "F. J., we are going to spend a quarter of a million dollars on this picture and by all means we want you to book it." Now to me that is about the silliest argument in the world. Just because they spend a quarter of a million dollars on the picture doesn't say that it is going to be a good picture. If this manufacturer would say to me, "F. J., this picture has not cost us as much as other pictures but it is a much better picture and we are able to give it to you at a much better figure and still make good profits on it," that would have been good sound business sense.

I have been buying and selling for twenty-five years in other lines of business, and only in this business do I hear the same old canvass that the gold brick man and the lightning rod agent put over on the gullible victims. Who pays when you make a quarter of a million dollar film? It is the exhibitor and the exhibitor today is strained to that point where he cannot pay his bills and it is about time to start a campaign against that ever increasing, senseless and additional overhead.

Co-operation means to me an arrangement by which both the manufacturer and exhibitor can make a living and the first thing that is necessary is to cut out these expenses instead of increasing them every day. What is a trade paper for if it isn't to fight the abuses on the inside as well as on the outside.

Very cordially yours,
F. J. Rembusch.

Alameda League Against Exhibitors' Star System

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Alameda County, California, at a recent meeting adopted strong resolutions against the "star system" and expressing confidence in "a daily consistent program." The officers of this League are, President, H. L. Beach, Strand theatre, Berkeley; Vice-President, J. Hellman, Hellman's theatre, Oakland; Secretary and Treasurer, Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, South Berkeley; Directors, G. E. Thornton, R. W. Midgeley, W. S. Smith, S. S. Range and A. E. King.

The text of the resolution, which bears the seal of the League, follows:

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League
of Alameda County
Organized for Protection and Elevation

The Motion Picture Exhibitors of Alameda County, California, in assembly this 21st day of September, 1916,

Do hereby resolve that the members of this organization hereby declare themselves as being opposed to the individual "Star System," being exploited by certain promoters, whose sole effort is to disrupt the organized program exchanges, by drawing away from the producers certain star players by offering fabulous salaries, expecting to charge extortionate rentals from the exhibitors. That encouraging the individual star system, we believe will weaken the daily program exchanges by drawing from their company the best drawing cards, and whereas it is necessary for the exhibitors to have a daily consistent program in order to maintain a steady average of patronage;

We are further opposed to the present method of districting theatres as to the price of pictures a day, believing the confidence of the exhibitors can be better maintained upon a flat rental based upon the age of pictures;

Therefore be it resolved, that the secretary of this organization be instructed to send copies of this resolution to all trade journals and film exchanges of the Pacific Coast.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League
of Alameda County, California.
Secretary: Will. F. Krahn.
President: H. L. Beach.

CLEVELAND LEAGUE MEETING IS WELL ATTENDED

The last regular meeting of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, was well attended by members, as well as by visitors who joined the League at the close of the meeting. Last week a committee of five was appointed, consisting of F. E. Simmonds, D. L. Schumann, A. Mahrer, William Slimm and James J. Mellert, to call upon all the Cleveland exhibitors in order to ascertain why they do not belong to the League, as well as to discover why those who do belong are not active members. The result of the committee's work was very satisfactory. They reported an entire willingness on the part of exhibitors to co-operate with the League, and there is no doubt that the League will soon one of the strongest motion picture organizations in the country.

The offices of the secretary being too burdensome for one man, the duties were voted to be divided between Sam Bullock as recording secretary and W. H. Horsey, as financial secretary.

MYRON T. HERRICK JOINS CLEVELAND SCREEN CLUB

Myron T. Herrick, former Ambassador to France, and Republican candidate for United States Senator, is an honorary member of the Cleveland Screen Club. He became one yesterday when he addressed the club at its weekly luncheon at the Olmstead hotel, and the election was unanimous.

The Screen Club had another guest of honor at its meeting in the person of Eleanor Black, leading woman for Enrico Caruso in films.

Reminiscenes of public men and big events occupied nearly the entire time allotted to the former diplomat. He recalled many of his experiences with Thomas A. Edison. He said the first motion picture he ever saw was "The Convict's Reform," in Mr. Edison's own private projection room in the early days of pictures.

"When the lights were turned on," said Mr. Herrick, "there were tears in Mr. Edison's eyes, but he explained their presence by saying that the light hurt his eyes. I like everything about Mr. Edison, except his recent departure in politics."

Another Big Merger of Producing Interests

Oliver Morosco and Pallas Pictures Effect Merger with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation—Identity of Pictures to Be Kept Distinct—Papers Signed at a Conference in New York Last Thursday—Believe Better Pictures and Greater Variety Will Be the Result

ANOTHER affiliation of important motion picture producing companies was effected last Thursday, announcement being made that the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures, productions of both of which appear on the Paramount Program, have merged with the Famous Players Film Company and the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company in the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The last-named company, organized more than a month ago, is capitalized at $12,500,000.

This new alignment of film interests represents the completion of plans, the consummation of which has been contemplated for nearly two years. Together, the producing companies named represent the forces of photoplay production constituting the entire Paramount Program, which releases 104 feature plays annually, or two every week.

The identities of the several companies represented in the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will continue to be distinct in the productions seen on the screens of theatres throughout the world.

The negotiations tending to this affiliation began in Los Angeles and were terminated last Thursday in New York. These conferences were attended by Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president; Arthur S. Friend, treasurer; E. J. Ludvigh, secretary; Oliver Morosco, president of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company; Miss Melodile Garbutt, president Pallas Pictures; Frank A. Garbutt, vice-president; William C. Demorest, Frederick G. Lee and Daniel Frohman. Miss Garbutt and Mr. Garbutt came to New York from Los Angeles recently to attend the conferences.

This combination will bring under one banner the greatest number of popular stage and screen stars ever assembled in a single organization, including Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Marie Doro, Fannie Ward, Leonore Ulrich, Blanche Sweet, Mae Murray, Myrtle Stedman, Louise Huff, Owen Moore, Marguerite Courtot, Jack Pickford, Vivian Martin, Cleo Ridgley, Lou-Tellegen, Dustin Farnum, Ann Pennington, Sessue Hayakawa, George Beban, Wallace Reid and others.

The photoplay productions bearing the names of "Morosco" and "Pallas" in the future, as in the past, will be produced at their big studio in Los Angeles. The merging of the resources of this extensive studio with the Lasky studio at Hollywood, California, and the Famous Players studio in New York, will probably bring about a higher and more artistic standard of motion picture productions than has obtained in the past.

Adolph Zukor, in commenting upon the amalgamation of these film interests, said: "This latest coalition unites under one government and one system of operation all the producing forces that create the Paramount Program. While these individual companies formerly co-operated with complete harmony toward the maintenance of the highest possible standard of motion picture production, under the new arrangement the opportunities for common artistic endeavor will be more numerous and extensive. This is the aspiration of all the factors in the Paramount group of producers, and undoubtedly the results that will accrue will be as beneficial as are all the effects of a unity of purpose. The interchange of stars, plays and studio equipment among the four plants will also constitute a more elastic and expansive producing force."

Frank A. Garbutt, of the Pallas-Morosco companies, said: "This amalgamation of interests is the logical outcome of plans which have been in contemplation ever since the formation of Paramount two years ago. Each company will retain its individuality and will go on manufacturing pictures as heretofore. The individual companies will, however, have a direct interest in the welfare and success of the other producers, thereby tending to provide the Paramount Program with pictures of increasing excellence in quality."

Oliver Morosco, president of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, in speaking of the affiliation, said: "The merging of our interests with those of the Famous Players and the Jesse L. Lasky Company is the natural tendency of the times toward quality photoplays. The photoplay industry is gradually undergoing parallel changes to those in the theatrical business, namely, the survival of the fittest. To this end the coalition of the Four Paramount producing companies is a step in the right direction. The advantages to the producers are economy in operation and increased efficiency; to Paramount this new step means a pronounced increase in the merit of the pictures; to the exhibitors it is an insurance that Paramount Pictures will keep pace with the demands of the day."

Hiram Abrams, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, upon being advised of the culmination of the merger, congratulated the factors involved and made the following statement: "At last the complete unification of the producing interests of Paramount has been accomplished. The combination under one management of the four producers may be expected to result in both a greater variety and a greater consistency of merit in the productions to appear on the Paramount Program."

Unicorn Reorganizes and Increases Service

Five-Reel Feature of Tested Merit Headed by Well-Known Star to Be Released Every Two Weeks—New Officers Elected

AN important event in the Motion Picture industry during the past week was the reorganization of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, with offices at 130 West 46th Street, New York. The firm has been releasing up to date twenty-one reels a week, consisting of one, two and three reel dramas and comedies, including several western features. The new board of officers consist of Ike Schlank, President; Fred B. Murphy, Vice-President; P. A. Chase, Treasurer, and H. A. Palmer, Secretary.

Through Mr. Schlank, it was announced that Unicorn intends a considerable broadening of its activities, of which full details will be given in a later announcement. It is reported on good authority that the Unicorn's new policy will embrace beside the one, two and three reel features, such as has made the Unicorn program notable in the past, a five reel feature starring a noted dramatic artist every two weeks.

"Our new policy," said Mr. Schlank, in discussing the new plans of the Unicorn, "will embrace an even wider field of endeavor than has been the case in the past. Of course, every concern under the sun, promises the exhibitor service and co-operation, but most of these claims have been merely hot air. The exhibitor, who has entered into business relations with the Unicorn during the past few months, realizes fully the practical help that we have tried to afford him, not merely by supplying him with a program of consistent excellence, but by the fact that in planing Unicorn features, he has had constantly back of him the service of a powerful organization .

"Our new regime contemplates a far wider field of activity than we have maintained in the past. For instance, we are contemplating giving the exhibitor a five reel feature of real and tested merit, every two weeks. Each of these features will be headed by a star of celebrity, supported by an adequate company of dramatic artists. We intend that these pictures should be 100 per cent. efficient, and also 100 per cent. candidates for the favor of the public. During the forthcoming week I shall have some further announcements to make in connection with our new plan of campaign."

IVAN SELLS AUSTRALIAN AND NEW ZEALAND RIGHTS

Messrs. Vogel and Howell, representing David Howells of Australia and the Co-operative Film Service of New Zealand, have made arrangements whereby these two companies will distribute Ivan productions in Australia and New Zealand. The first two Ivan productions to be shown in this territory will be "Faded Flower" and "Her Surrender," prints of which have already been shipped to this territory. These pictures will be exhibited about the first of November in both Australia and New Zealand.

High Pressure at Metro Until Christmas

All Studios Work at Top Speed to Complete Subjects for Program Mapped Out by the Company—Many New and Elaborate Productions Are Under Way for the Coming Season—Addition of S. Rankin Drew Makes Fifth of the Barrymore-Drew Family Under the Banner of the Corporation

ANNOUNCEMENT of many new and elaborate productions for the coming season already under way or in preparation was made at the offices of the Metro Pictures Corporation, in the Longacre Building, 1476 Broadway, early this week, and from now until Christmas all the Metro studios will be working under high pressure, if the program mapped out is to be completed in the time designated.

A new addition to the Metro artistic and directing staff will be S. Rankin Drew of the Vitagraph forces, who comes to Metro October 21. He will at once begin work on an important feature photoplay at the Rolfe studios with Emmy Wehlen in the starring role. This feature is entitled "The Belle of the Season," and is based on Ella Wheeler Wilcox's famous poem of the same name. It has been adapted for the screen by June Mathis with Miss Wehlen's distinctive personality and superb dramatic gifts especially in mind, and the picture promises to be one of the season's sensations.

"The Belle of the Season" will be the first of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's works to be picturized for Metro, the motion picture rights to all the writings of this famous and gifted poetess being owned by that corporation. It will be followed by others, as rapidly as suitable screen adaptations can be made of the originals.

Originally it was intended to star Miss Wehlen in "The Belle of the Season" before she began production on "Vanity," on which she is now engaged under the direction of John B. O'Brien at the Popular Plays and Players studio, but Mr. Drew, who is directing Anita Stewart in "The Girl Philippa" for the Vitagraph was unwilling to make any arrangements which might compel him to finish this elaborate feature within too limited a time. Under the present arrangement, however, he will have ample time to complete the picture and prepare to take up his new duties with Metro without being unduly pressed.

Fifth of Barrymore-Drew Family

The addition of Mr. Drew to Metro's artistic staff makes the fifth of the famous Barrymore-Drew family to enlist under the Metro banner, the others being Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Lionel Barrymore and Ethel Barrymore, all of whom have long been notable in the list of Metro stars.

Another important offering from Metro in the near future will be "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie," with Ethel Barrymore in the stellar part, which was placed in production early in the week at the Metro-Rolfe studio. This picturization of Margaret Deland's most famous novel is the first motion picture work Miss Barrymore has done since her last Metro production, "The Kiss of Hate," produced just prior to her road tour in "Our Mrs. McChesney."

"The Awakening of Helena Ritchie" is one of the best known novels ever published in this country.

John W. Nobel is the director of the new production, having just completed "The Brand of Cowardice" for the star's brother, Lionel Barrymore. He will have the assistance of Fred Sittenham and Charles Maigne.

Robert Cummings will play Lloyd Pryor, who poses as Helena's brother to save the feelings of the righteous neighborhood of Old Chester. Robert Whittier is Helena's husband, the Frederick of the prologue; Charles Snow has the congenial part of old Dr. Lavendar.

Mme. Petrova at the Popular Plays and Players studio has begun a new five-part Metro wonderplay with the attractive title, "The Black Butterfly." This production promises to be one of Metro's sensations, from many points of view. The story is from the pen of Mrs. L. Case Russell. The scene of "The Black Butterfly" is laid "somewhere in France," and the action, continuing through several years, culminates in the time of the present war.

Mme. Petrova has the part of a star of the Folies Bergere, a position which the gifted actress herself formerly held. Experiments of scientific laboratory, peasant life in France, and the gaiety of Paris are contrasted in this photoplay. Burton L. King is again Mme. Petrova director, and Mahon Hamilton and Edward Martindel are prominent in her support.

Gordon Supports Emmy Wehlen

At the same studio, as already mentioned, Emmy Wehlen, under the direction of John B. O'Brien, is making the feature photodrama, "Vanity," which Aaron Hoffman has written especially for the star. It shows Miss Wehlen's versatility, being totally unlike "The Pretenders," the latest screen production in which she appeared, or in fact, any other of her productions. Paul Gordon, who played opposite Miss Wehlen in "The Pretenders," has been engaged to support her in "Vanity" as well. He is best remembered for his work as the aviator in the stage production, "Moloch." This is the first Popular Plays and Players' production with this star, director, and leading support. The play illustrates the lengths to which a vain woman will go to obtain the means with which to feed her vanity, but more than that, it shows the adroitness, the careful plotting and planning of a man who is determined to throw a net around a woman from which she cannot extricate herself without his dearly-bought aid. Tom O'Keefe plays the chief of detectives, and W. W. Black is his lieutenant.

W. Christy Cabanné, at the Quality studio, is perfecting plans for the fourteen episode serial, as yet unnamed, which will serve as the medium for the genius of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Work on this immense production was begun this week. Mr. Cabanné, has just completed his first offering for the Metro program, starring Frances Nelson, producing a five-part feature picture in eight days. This new production, formerly called "Love, Honor and Obey," will be released under the title of "One of Many." Niles Welch is featured with Miss Nelson, the star.

George D. Baker will return from a short vacation and sea trip next week to produce "Squire Flynn," with Lionel Barrymore as the star. "Squire Flynn" is a picturization of Holman F. Day's popular novel. Mr. Barrymore's supporting cast has not been chosen as yet, and this detail will not be completed until Mr. Baker's return. Charles Hunt will again assist him in this picture.

Emily Stevens has already begun her regular dramatic season in "The Unchastened Woman," having finished the Metro-Rolfe production, to be released late in November, called "The Wager." "The Wager" is of Mr. Baker's writing and directing.

"Dave" Thompson has been promoted from the position of assistant director to that of director. His first production will be made with Julius Steger as star in a Metro feature play as yet unnamed. This will be Mr. Steger's first Metro production since "The Blindness of Love."

Mabel Taliaferro at Work in "Sunbeam"

Mabel Taliaferro, last seen on the Metro program in the Rolfe picture "The Dawn of Love," is deep in her new production, written by Shannon Fife and June Mathis, called "The Sunbeam." Edwin Carewe, as usual, is Miss Taliaferro's director, and this Metro is fast approaching completion. The veteran actor, Gerald Griffin, plays the part of Rutherford, a candy manufacturer in whose life everything is sweet, but his own disposition. Raymond McKee, playing opposite the star, has the role of Danny O'Madigan, a product of the reformatories. Gladys Alexandria, a dramatic leading woman, makes her bow to the screen in the part of Ellen, Rutherford's daughter-in-law. That clever character actress, Hattie Delaro, has the part of Rutherford's housekeeper.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, the creators of the comedy of the home, continue to make a one-act picture each week at the Rolfe studio. Dainty Viola Dana is completing "The Gates of Eden," the five-act feature by Rev. William E. Danforth depicting life in a Shaker community. Edward Earle, Robert Walker and Augustus Phillips have parts of practically equal importance in her support. John H. Collins is director.

NEW $300,000 THEATRE FOR CHICAGO

Sam Katz, who owns several Chicago photoplay houses, has just signed a contract for a Style A Bartola, to be installed in the Wallace theatre, 620 West Thirty-first street, Chicago. Mr. Katz and Barney Balaban are the joint promoters of a $300,000 moving picture theatre, to be erected on West Twelfth street, Chicago.

Open Booking or the Program—Which? — II.

"Why Make the Exhibitor Pay the Same Price for Gold, Silver, Brass and Tin?" Asks Lewis J. Selznick, in Defending the Open Booking Plan Against the Attacks of Program Advocates—Difference of Opinion in Baltimore

LEWIS J. SELZNICK sums up his opinion of the Program System in a nut-shell as a plan by which the exhibitor is forced "to pay the same price for gold, silver, brass and tin."

"This illustration," says he, "seems to me a particularly apt one. Under the program system the exhibitor not only has to pay that same price for gold, silver, brass and tin, but in order to get the gold he has to take the silver, brass and tin as well, whether he wants it or not.

"If all the pictures on a program were money makers the situation would not be so bad, but it does not need me to tell the exhibitor that out of any of the program producing corporations' output he never gets more than one or two pictures a month that really pull the people in from off of the streets.

"I contend that the open booking system is the only thing that will save the industry from going on the rocks. Let me give my reasons for this belief:

"Open booking would be the means of readjusting the over-production of feature pictures, which is the worst phase of present-day conditions. The open booking system gives the exhibitor a chance to pick his big attractions and play them when he chooses. Under the open booking system the producers would be forced by competition to put their best effort into every individual production.

"Open booking would enable every exhibitor to play all of the big stars now in the field instead of being limited as at present by his weekly contract with programs. Open booking would force every exhibitor to improve the character of his house and program and thereby increase motion picture patronage by the million. Every exhibitor knows his local conditions better than any producer in the country and under open booking would be able to satisfy his patrons week in and out.

"These are a few of the more vital points in favor of the open booking plans. It would be easy to point out its manifold advantages indefinitely. I consider myself peculiarly qualified to express an opinion on this question, having been on both sides of the fence in the course of my film career.

"It seems to me that the doom of the program system is close at hand. The handwriting on the wall is large and firmly written so that he who runs may read. The motion picture has passed the novelty stage. It no longer draws its huge crowds simply because it is a new form of diversion. Picture houses are jammed to the doors today only when one of the popular idols of the screen is being shown or when some great spectacular production is the attraction.

"We hear it proclaimed that the program is the backbone of the industry. So it is, but the industry is suffering from curvature of the spine."

Exhibitors in Maryland and Omaha Have Different Views

Certainty of Program and Advertising Value of Known Definite Pictures Set Against Value of Independent Selection to Meet Requirements of Local Audience

THERE is rather a difference of opinion among Baltimore exhibitors as to the relative value of program versus open-booking. Guy L. Wonders, manager of the Wilson theatre, and president of the Maryland Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, is of the opinion that contract booking is the best thing for houses changing their program daily, while open booking is the best for houses which change twice a week.

"In the open booking field," said Mr. Wonders, "there is always the possibility of the man who changes his program daily, having a picture switched on him and thereby confusing his entire bill. This has happened frequently and is a very undesirable state of affairs. In the case of a theatre running a show three days straight a switch of bookings is not so likely to occur and, of course, it has its advantage of eliminating the least desirable class of photoplays or those that are lacking the essential punch.

"When an exhibitor is tied up with a contract, which is usually the case with the house changing its bill every day, he feels relatively certain that he is going to get the show, which is scheduled for him as it works on the regular circuit plan. Of course he is tied up with the producers on the deposit which is now required from all the leading film manufacturers of the country. This is one particularly undesirable feature in the exhibitors' end of the motion picture business. Why an exhibitor is compelled to deposit $200, $400, $600, $1,000 or almost any amount that his service calls for and should receive no returns from this money is very hard to explain.

There is one thing sure the exhibitors should receive at least a fair amount of interest for this money which is locked up in the coffers of the film manufacturers or distributing company, whichever the case may be.

"To my mind, a very satisfactory arrangement is that offered by the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay, in which the bookings run only for ten pictures and you can select your pictures, which requires a deposit of only twenty per cent. of the contract price while the exhibitor receives upon the release of his first picture an amount equal to sixty per cent. of the money deposited. We exhibitors are in hopes that the deposit system will in the near future work out a little more beneficially to the theatre man than the present general plan."

See All Pictures Before Show

Bernard Depkin, Jr., manager of the Parkway theatre, is strongly in favor of the open booking program. "It is the policy of this house," said Mr. Depkin, "to view all pictures before they are given their public presentation. Those that are not desirable are canceled and something else substituted. We have decided upon this plan as the best after almost a year of contract booking. We were tied up with a contract by one of the largest concerns in the country and used their film as it was released. As we cater to the best people in Baltimore, there is always a number of objections to the pictures that are not up to the highest standard. As it was not agreeable to the film concern for us to shelve the pictures that we considered were not available we decided that the best and only plan would be to enter the open market.

"This plan has been most satisfactory, both to myself and the patrons of the theatre. The latter have now learned that everything presented at the theatre is of the highest stamp of modern motion picture art, while from my own standpoint I know in advance just what the picture that I will present will be and eliminate all eleventh hour switches. To my mind, the open booking proposition is the only satisfactory plan for the motion picture exhibitor."

Advertising Value of Program

"By booking by program I know what I'll get. I don't have to take a chance of getting what I can," said Manager H. M. Thomas of the Strand, Omaha's largest and exclusive motion picture theatre. "I believe the manufacturer is able to make better films if he has regular customers. But on the other hand, with the open market booking to deal with, competition forces him to try to put out pictures better than anyone else. I prefer the program booking because, as I said, I know what I'll have to show my patrons, I can advertise and can make ready for the picture. Frequently, however, when I get a chance at a good picture in the open market, I get it. Of course I have to pay for the regular service at the same time, but more often than not, it pays me big."

A prominent Omaha theatre owner and exhibitor, who would not have his name made known, for obvious reasons, said: "I do open booking. Why? Because I know the exchanges are constantly battling each other. I go to this exchange for a picture. The manager says to himself, 'I'll give this fellow the best I have, and he'll come back. Maybe he'll be a seven-day program patron.' So he gives me the best he has. I go to the next manager; he does the same. I get the best, I pay cash no matter how high the price, and I am a welcome customer—also, I believe I get the cream of the pictures released here."

INCE RECEIVES LETTER FROM PRESIDENT

Upon Thos. H. Ince, producer of "Civilization," now showing at the Park theatre, New York, N. Y., has been conferred a most unusual honor. President Wilson invited Mr. Ince to Shadow Lawn that he might personally congratulate him on his achievement in creating such a spectacle as "Civilization."

After Mr. Ince returned to New York he received the following patriotic sentiment in the President's own handwriting. The President's message reads: "The nations of the world must unite in joint guarantees that whatever is done that is likely to disturb the whole world's life must first be tested in the court of the whole world's opinion before it is attempted, and the United States must be ready to join in the guarantee and back it up by her whole force and influence. Settled and secure peace can be made sure of in no other way when the present war is over.

"Woodrow Wilson."

Mr. Ince has added the President's message to "Civilization" in the form of an insert, and together with a portrait of Mr. Wilson.

JOHN EMERSON TO DIRECT DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS AGAIN

Director John Emerson, loaned by Triangle to the Famous Players for the past two months, has been recalled, and will leave at once for the Triangle-Fine Arts studios at Hollywood, Cal.

The reason for the haste in the departure of Director Emerson lies in a telegram received by Harry E. Aitken, president of Triangle, from Douglas Fairbanks. In his wire Fairbanks announced that he was on the ground and ready to start on his next picture, but that he craved two boons —first, that John Emerson act as his director; second, that Anita Loos write the titles for his plays.

Emerson directed Fairbanks in "His Picture in the Papers," one of the earliest Triangle-Fairbanks releases. The last production he made for the Triangle company before coming east two months ago was the Sir Herbert Tree film presentation of "Macbeth."

World Film Buys Large Tract for New Studio

Purchase Eight Thousand Acres Near Poughkeepsie for Largest Studio and Production Plant in the East

THE World Film Corporation has secured a final option upon a tract of approximately 8,000 acres not far from Poughkeepsie with a view to building a large studio and general production plant.

Architects and builders have already been consulted and active construction operations will begin as soon as the numerous titles have been formally passed to the realty concern which has been engaged in assembling this extensive property.

A man prominently identified with World interests said in relation to the contemplated move: "Naturally, we cannot go very far into details at this time without danger of embarrassing the gentlemen who have been buying up the numerous parcels of land required for so large an area as the one desired for our purpose. But I may say that the property is extremely desirable for its accessibility by boat and rail, as well as for the extraordinary variety and beauty of its scenic advantages.

"These are practically inexhaustible, including lakes, streams, mountainous ridges, broad, fertile valleys, forests, old farms and lumber camps and a number of private estates. In getting all this together, piece by piece, at prices within reason, the real estate promoters have been occupied for many months, and they expect to be able to turn the entire accumulation over to us within the next few weeks.

"The World Company's contract with the Paragon studio terminated the other day and will be continued only in so far as our printing is concerned. We are so exceptionally well advanced with our completed releases, which cover the next six months, that it will not be necessary for us to overcrowd the facilities of our Peerless studio during this period, and considerably before its expiration the big new plant will be at our disposal in additon to the Peerless.

"The new studio will be the largest in the East, and, as a matter of course, this and the other buildings will be ultra modern in every particular."

New Helen Holmes Serial Melodramatic Thriller

First Episode of "A Lass of the Lumberland," Released October 23, Filled to Overflowing with Unusual Thrills

HELEN MOLMES' admirers—and they are numerous—have a brand new set of thrills in store for them at an early date. The first episode of "A Lass of the Lumberlands," the fifteen-chapter Signal picture made for the Mutual Film Corporation, will be released October 23, and the succeeding episodes will appear weekly thereafter. Miss Holmes—says that this is the biggest and best chance she has had to display her love of meeting physical perils face to face.

It is a story of the lumberlands, as its title suggests, and the action of the play extends from the silences of the great woods, broken only by the ringing of the logger's axe, the crashing of giant pines, and the noises peculiar to a timber camp in the snow-covered wilderness, out into the world of Big Business, on to the Capitol at Washington, and even intrudes into the sacred precincts of the Supreme Court of the United States.

"'A Lass of the Lumberlands' is melodrama pure and simple—but melodrama of a surpassing sort, unmarred by recourse to improbabilities," says the President of the Signal Company, producer of the film. The plot takes big human situations and treats them in a big, human way. Witness Rupert Holmes cursing wife and child in birthbed, because it is a daughter instead of a son! Neatly capped by the climax of the outraged physician putting the brute out of his own cabin! Here is breathless suspense of the sort that beckons the crowds.

Among the realisms of the picture is the forming of a great log jam, over which Holmes' wife, fleeing with her babe in terror of her husband, because she knows he has seen her watching him murder an Indian chief, springs from log to log only to be hurled into the stream when a charge of dynamite is set off beneath the water to dislodge the key-log. The first episode closes with the woman being whirled away through the rapids, clinging to a log and holding her baby in the flying spray.

The current sweeps her past a rocky point beneath a cliff, where the widow of the Indian chief mourns with her infant son beside the broken body of her lord.

"MY COUNTRY FIRST" FOR PREPAREDNESS BAZAAR

A committee headed by Sterling P. Story, director of the Committee of the Preparedness Bazaar, to be held in the Grand Central Palace, from December 14 to 21, under the auspices of the American Patriot and Relief Society, has practically decided to adopt the Variety Film Corporation's motion picture photo-play, "My Country First," as the feature of the gathering.

Mr. Story and his associates viewed the picture during the past week and were unanimous in saying that they would recommend it to the attention of the Committee on Preparedness, which includes among other notable personages, Major William H. Elliott, Adj. General of the Junior American Guard; Mrs. William Cummings Story, president of the Daughters of the American Revolution; Mrs. Elphinstone Maitland, Honorary Secretary of the Blue Grass Fund; Mrs. Lee R. Boardman, president of the American Womens' League for Self Defense; George H. Masten and Arthur De V. Storey.

"My Country First" is a photoplay which depicts vividly the imminent danger of America from the machinations of foreign spies. Tom Terriss, the international star, is featured in the picture, for the plot of which he is also responsible. He is supported by a notable company, which includes Jill Woodward and Helene Ziegfield.

What Is Artistic Future of Motion Picture

Louis Tracy, Author of Pathe's "Grip of Evil," Criticizes Weak Plot Construction of Average Production and Makes Plea for Elimination of Trite and Hackneyed Situations—Educated Public Demands Better Artistic Standards

"THERE is a spice of the prophet in all of us," says Louis Tracy, author of "The Grip of Evil," produced by Pathe. "I suppose a man or a woman is secretly flattered by being asked to give an opinion as to the course of future events. With this confession of human weakness, coupled with the proviso that most modern prophets fail badly —witness the total collapse of seers and clairvoyants, and the rest of the tribe, in their efforts to prognosticate the duration and outcome of the present war in Europe—in a word, qualifying my comments with a very modest assumption of any valid reason to speak with authority, I am glad to be given an opportunity to express certain theories which I have evolved as to the future of the motion picture.

"Let me be quite candid. I have no thorough knowledge of the motion picture itself. But all art is kin, and the man who has written more than fifty books, striving in each to unfold a panorama of life expressed in words which shall create pictures in the reader's mind, should have formed at least a close acquaintance with the telling of a story, whether in print or on the screen. For one thing, he should long ago have discarded the outworn equipment with which every young writer starts. This is the first real achievement of the author who emerges into the limelight—he gets rid of the load of hackneyed situations and trite phrases that his immature wit deemed new and wondrous. He is compelled to dig into his own resources. If the crude ore thus obtained yields a fair percentage of metal, he takes his place unchallenged on some shelf of Olympus, and the height of his perch is measured thenceforth by the growth and range of his genius.

"Though the author thus arrived. so to speak, may never obtain high rank among the immortals, he must at least be a skilled craftsman. To vary the metaphor, he is in the position of the trained worker in wood, who, given any chunk of timber, will produce therefrom a well-made and artistic piece of furniture, and, if shown a fine bit of hammered iron, appreciate its beauty of line and design.

"To my thinking, therefore, the production of a picture and a book aim at the same goal, though necessarily following following different paths, and I so often see the complete failure of the motive sought on the screen that I am driven to the conclusion that the motion picture world suffers from a dearth of penetrative yet artistic imagination.

"This is a strong statement, and my chief difficulty is that I don't like to adduce proof. Yet, bereft of any real evidence, my opinion lacks force, and I can depend only on generalities to support it. The other evening, however, in a well-known New York picture house I watched the development of a drama which, to my thinking, contained every fault inherent to crude and unimaginative production. The camera work was excellent, but the plot and construction were beneath contempt. I wondered whether or no the crowded audience shared my views. It did. It commenced to dissolve by twos and threes. Soon whole platoons discovered that in these days of car strikes it was well to get home early. Frankly, the picture was a complete failure, and the failure was due, not to the want of art in the screen work, but because of a monstrous disregard both of commonsense and human nature shown by the producer, who had been content to string together a series of situations which, he fondly believed, contained the necessary 'punch.' Now, there is nothing new in comedy or drama. Plenty of the jokes current in New York today were retailed in Athens two hundred years before the Christian era, while there is only one dramatist living who would regard himself as superior to the ancient Greeks, an opinion of his worth which is peculiarly his own. In my own domain, that of story-teller pure and simple, I have a long way to travel before I essay even a workmanlike copy of the human interest or the picturesque setting of many of the great romances set forth in the Bible. But, throughout the ages, Art ever aims at a high standard, and, in any new phase or development, quickly sheds the elements of ignorance and ugliness. I am as sure as a man can be sure of anything that the motion picture industry has nearly purged itself of its first errors in this respect.

"An educated public is no longer content with the dramatic genius of the producer who thinks he has attained the height of his art when striking situations succeed each other: 'Click! Click! Click' with so many accompanying snappings of finger and thumb.

"In fact, it has given out long since, and the public are getting wise to the condition. What, then, will be the outcome? I am not afraid to answer—not afraid even to prophesy. I believe that the trained author, artist, actor, and stage manager will come into their own again. The standard of production must be raised. The public must be given a sure-enough story. The attention of the audience must be held by the display of true emotion, and its inteerst stimulated by situations drawn from real life.

"In this regard, at any rate, I am in a position to furnish direct testimony as to the tendency of the hour. A little while ago no motion picture company would dream of paying an author of some repute the price which would warrant him in giving the best of his work to the newspaper serial version published nowadays almost contemporaneously with the appearance of a picture in the local theatres. But the Pathe Exchange and the Photo-Drama Company of New York, broke through the supposed limitations of the industry when they commissioned me to write "The Grip of Evil" and "The Yellow Menace" respectively. I have reason to believe that the experiment has proved successful."

CIVILIZATION AIDS IN N. Y. PEACE WEEK

Last week was Peace week in New York, and no less than six peace organization held meetings in the course of the week. They selected the Park theatre, Columbus Circle, where "Civilization" is being shown as the scene of their evening meetings. The itinerary was as follows:

Monday, the Society of Friends; Tuesday, New York State Committee Opposing Conscription; Wednesday, Woman's Peace Party; Thursday, Neutral Conference Committee; Friday, National Organization Against Militarism; Saturday, Anti-Militarist Labor Conference.

As an evidence of his practical sympathy with the objects of the societies, Mr. Ince donated a percentage of each evening's receipts towards the funds of the organizations.

Some of the most prominent supporters of the peace propaganda attended the performances of "Civilization" and spoke in support of their points of view. These included Dr. Frederick C. Howe, U. S. Commissioner of Immigration, Hamilton Holt, editor of the New York Independent; Dr. Frank Crane, well-known writer.

CHANGES IN OCTOBER RELEASE SCHEDULE

The Knickerbocker Star Feature announces the following changes in the October schedule of releases:

The release of October 6 will be Jackie Saunders in the "Better Instinct" in two reels. For October 13 the release will be Joyce Moore in "From the Deep," as previously announced. For the last two weeks of the month a two-reel feature will be released on October 20, featuring Frank Mayo and Joyce Moore in "Treading Pearls." It is a story of the sacrifice of one sister in an effort to keep the other on the straight road.

The last feature of the month will be released October 27, featuring Marie Empress, the famous stage star, in "The Chorus Girl and the Kid."

CIVILIZATION HAS BIG WEEK IN NEWARK

"Civilization" last week, at one theatre in Newark, N. J., took in over $7,000. It was offered to Werner & Hall, the owners of the New Jersey rights at $500 per day, and for the moment the sum looked big and the offer was turned down. But on the figures shown the picture would have stood a much higher rental and have yielded, on the returns, a handsome profit.

BIG KLEINE BOOKINGS

Reports coming in from the various branch offices of the Kleine organization point to an even greater number of bookings on the George Kleine motion picture novel, "Gloria's Romance," at this time, than was the case when the picture was first announced for release.

Not only are many houses now open and doing a good business which were closed during the hot summer months, when Billie Burke and "Gloria's Romance" first came into the public eye, but hundreds of new theatres, seeking an unusual attraction with which to inaugurate their advent into the amusement world, have chosen "Gloria's Romance."

In the Middle West, Manager Jenner of the Chicago office, has already on his books a long list of theatres which are playing this twenty week feature offering, running it in conjunction with some of the five and six reel features now available on Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service.

From the Denver and Salt Lake City offices Manager Buckwalter reports: "There is a renewed interest in Billie Burke and 'Gloria's Romance.' I find many houses ready and eager to begin the picture now that the hot summer season is past and an eager public is seeking recreation indoors, after months spent at the beaches or in the mountains."

Still farther west, Manager Edmunds of the San Francisco branch, writes: "The new booking policy is meeting with much favor. I am closing great numbers of contracts for the run of the Hughes story with Western exhibitors, who are evidently strong believers in the power of advertising which such a tremendous attraction offers."

VITAGRAPH MAKES CHANGE

Beginning October 29, the Greater Vitagraph will release its Hughie Mack comedies directed by Lawrence Semon through the distributing organization known as V-L-S-E.

For sometime past various rumors have been abroad regarding this move but this is the first official intimation from Greater Vitagraph's executives that the comedies in which Hughie Mack is featured can be obtained after October 29 at any of the Vitagraph (V-L-S-E) exchanges.

Mr. Semon, an artist and cartoonist of international reputation has created a splendid name for himself with these comedies, which have been heretofore upon the releases of the General Film Company. He has gathered together a company familiarly known as "Semon's Sea Lions," with which he has been turning out genuinely funny comedies.

Among the important members of the company there can be named the following: Hughie Mack, Patsey DeForest, Edward Dunn, William Shea, Joseph Simberg and Frank Brule.

SELIG FEATURE NEARING COMPLETION

The Selig feature "The Light of Western Stars" by Zane Gray, is rapidly nearing completion under the direction of E. A. Martin. The entire production fairly bristles with red-blooded action. Bessie Eyton and Tom Mix are co-starred.

Eugene B. Sanger Has Had Varied Experience

Head of Sanger Picture Plays Corporation Will Utilize Past Experience to Put Quality Into His Pictures

EVER since the initial announcements from the office of the Sanger Picture Plays Corporation, no small amount of conjecture has been hazarded as to the future policy of the new corporation. Up to date, all plans have been shrouded in silence, but some ideas of the quality of the plays to be produced may be determined when one realizes that the guiding force of the Sanger Picture Plays Corporation is Eugene B. Sanger.

His thirty-five years' experience in the theatrical field has led him into practically every line, ballet, minstrelsy, vaudeville, musical comedy, light opera, the drama, Shakespearian repertoire, advance man, concert manager, director, and photo play manufacturer. It was Mr. Sanger who staged the first pageant presented in this country, the historical commemoration given at Bronxville in the May of 1908, in which the participants were the residents of Westchester. And it was Mr. Sanger who has made college theatricals a worthy representative of their respective Alma Maters. Mr. Sanger has produced as many as seven plays at a time, including those for the Triangle Club at Princeton, the Hasty Pudding at Harvard, the Paint and Powder at Baltimore, the Mask and Wig at Philadelphia, and for Yale, Columbia, Barnard, etc.

"All art is a materialization of the imagination," says Mr. Sanger. "The photo play, to express it a little more definitely, a vizualization of the imagination. Can any one censor the imagination? One of our congressmen might just as well attempt to censor the kiss. But, I do adhere to this, whatever is agreed on as being vulgar, obscene, must be eliminated. If every photo manufacturer would see to it that his plant comprised a scenario editor, who is capable of judging plays, a director who can direct, capable actresses and actors—then we would not hear about so many committees and sub-committees delegated to confer upon censorship.

"And to come down from a general discussion to matters more personal, while we are not yet prepared to give formal announcement of our plans, I can say this, our studio is located right here in New York City, we will have actors and actresses who will portray real plays, everything will be done in so constructive a manner that no steps will have to be retaken.

"The scrip of the play to be produced will be read before the assembled company that they may know the story in its entirety and not, as generally happens, be put to the acting of assorted scenes, groping for effects they can only guess at. They will be given ample time, both after the reading and during the rehearsals, to think of their respective parts, to build up their characterizations, to give of their best. The same careful study will be given to the mounting of each play, even to the veriest detail."

McCLURE SERIES NOT AN ALLEGORY

While based upon a morality theme, "Seven Deadly Sins" the forthcoming series of McClure Pictures, is far removed from plays of the type of "Everyman." The action of "Seven Deadly Sins" occurs in the present. There will be no allegorical figures to typify "Envy," "Pride," "Greed," "Sloth," etc. Instead these evils will be represented by men and women of today, whose characters are the embodiment of such sins. Opposed to them are noble characters depicted by such McClure stars as Anna Murdock, Nance O'Neill and Charlotte Walker.

Artistic, Effective Staging for "The Dawnmaker"

WILLIAM S. HART'S "The Dawnmaker" was the latest Triangle-Ince feature staged by J. G. von Herberg of the Liberty theatre in Seattle.

After a private showing of "The Dawnmake" Mr. von Herberg decided that the central theme—the point on which our advertising, staging and music would revolve was the Northland—that cold, vast region where romance goes hand in hand with adventure—where man rules and loves by right of primal might.

Gordon F. Fullerton the advertising manager, built his cuts to carry this theme, and emphasized Hart's face and name. In the background of a rising sun was Hart dressed as an Indian—set into the sun's rays was the title of the play "The Dawnmaker," while into the dark sky above was set Hart's name in white letters. At the bottom of the advertisement was a horizon of snow covered evergreen trees into the solid portion of which was worked the theatre's name "LIBERTY" in snow covered rustic letters. The billboards and window cards, covered the city highways and business section, while framed photos of Hart, and framed scenes of the play were placed in the windows of the big business houses of Seattle's "Broadway"—Second avenue. Large advertisements were placed in the photoplay sections of the Seattle Sunday Times and Saturday Evening Star.

Theatre Bower of Evergreens

To create atmosphere for the feature the inside lobby was turned into a bower or cave of evergreen, the walls, ceiling and lights all being hidden by the sweet smelling aromatic pine, spruce and fir with a dash of color lent by autumn leaves which formed a large part of the ceiling decoration.

An Indian maid was the cashier and Indian maids were the ushers. The costumes were rented from a local costumer, but to lend the necessary touch of realism, real Indian headpieces of wampum and real eagle feathers formed the headpiece. The girls' hair was parted in the middle—Indian style with a braid hanging down either shoulder. The management secured the genuine Indian wampum and eagle feathers from a local branch of the Hudson Bay Fur Company.

The introductory music and lighting effects in the theatre itself were the most difficult problems, for it was decided that not only should this heighten the dramatic effect of Hart's "Dawnmaker" and serve as an introduction, but they must be distinctive and entirely different from anything ever done before.

Effects with Organ

As the Liberty is unusually well lighted and the organ is always on the job, the established order of things was reversed and electrified the audience. Gradually we darkened the house. Starting from the top and back of the theatre, one by one the lights flashed out and absolute silence prevailed. (the ushers seated nobody while the feature was opening). As the last light flashed out in the front, a low violin and cello combination was started on the organ, accented with the slow solemn boom of chimes, one at a time, as if one had awakened in the dark and the grandfather clock had tolled the hour. By this time, in the two lighting boxes at either side of the curtain was a dim bluish light gradually lightening to grey and then a rosy dawn revealing distant snow capped peaks, the sky steaked with the rays of the rising sun, while in the foreground were foothills covered with snow laden evergreen. As the colors changed from dim blue to grey and pink, the music suggested the hum and undertone of wild life astir at dawn, the awakening song of birds, dropping again to dead silence as the title, "William S. Hart's 'Dawnmaker'" was flashed onto the curtain only to take up the musical interpretation of the picture as the first scene of the play was framed by the opening curtain, and the audience was into the play. Round after round of applause greeted the effect which has been the talk of all Seattle since the opening of "The Dawnmaker." The theatre was packed all day Sunday with the crowds extending into the street in the afternoon and evening, and capacity houses each of the following three afternoons with S. R. O. the following three evenings, when considering that the Liberty is a 2200 capacity house with heavy competition, this is the more remarkable.

Startling Innovation Inaugurated by Kentucky Exhibitor Whereby Patrons Pay Only If Satisfied with Performance

THE latest and one of the most successful innovations in theatre management that has been inaugurated by any of the Paramount theatre managers throughout the country, was reported to the Paramount Pictures Corporation last week, by their Cincinnati office, in which they pointed out that Messrs. Judy and Gay, of the Tabb theatre, at Mt. Sterling, Ky., had inaugurated a "pay-as-you-leave" system of conducting their business, and that they had increased their business wonderfully.

The managers of this theatre contended that the theatrical business was one of the few that collected their revenue before the people knew whether they liked it or not, and that they had decided to only collect admissions after patrons had witnessed their show.

In their communication the managers said: "We made the proposition that we would not sell any tickets as people entered the show, but would sell them as they went out. We further stated that if they liked the show they would please stop at the box office and pay the regular price of admission. If they did not like the show they would not pay us one cent. Of course we stood at the door to see how many would think the picture not worth ten cents. To our surprise there was only one couple that left that did not stop and pay for their tickets. On Tuesday night, however, he stopped at the box office and asked if he did not walk out last night without paying. Of course we stated that we did not know. He said, "Well I did and I had no intention of so doing, for it was one of the best pictures that I have ever seen." We were very much pleased at the advertising, for that was all you could hear the people talk about. It was so different from anything they had ever had sprung on them, it took them completely by surprise."

FENWAY, BOSTON, PARAMOUNT HOUSE, LETS DOVES AND CANARIES FLY ABOUT STAGE

Frank Stanton, manager of the Fenway theatre, Boston, a Paramount theatre, has quite a novelty in a stage setting and effects. The setting is handsome, with heavy red velvet hangings, with the orchestra on the stage. Many light effects are worked by starting the overture in darkness and gradually working up into different colors, but the real punch is the release of several doves who fly about the stage. About ten large cages of canary birds are released and they sing all through the overture, also when the singer is on.

ORIGINAL STUNT BRINGS BIG RESULTS

A confirmation that exhibitors are awakening to the fact that novel advertising stunts are great business getters in these days of competition, is evidenced in a recent announcement from the Los Angeles Symphony theatre, the first-run Metro house, managed by Mrs. T. H. Du Boise. The announcement appeared in the form of a slide projected in the theatre, and on hand-bills distributed by the ushers, and read as follows:

"The management of this theatres takes great pleasure in announcing that Harold Lockwood and May Allison, the popular screen stars, will present personally autographed copies of 'Mister 44,' E. J. Rath's novel to the best constructed essays on the picture written during the time 'Mister 44' is shown at the Symphony theatre. Come and see this excellent Harold Lockwood-May Allison picture, soon to be shown at the Symphony theatre, and participate in the contest."

Three weeks before the showing of "Mister 44" the Symphony theatre newspaper ads included a new mysterious catch line daily, ending with the title of the picture, which stimulated curiosity and interest among local picturegoers. The inquiries concerning these mysterious "Mister 44" lines were startling, according to Mrs. Du Bois.

JUVENILE PROGRAM FOR DES MOINES

A juvenile program for the children of Des Moines, in which the women of the city will not censor the pictures, but will leave the choice of the programs to the picture men is the latest development of the "movies" in the Iowa capital. The City Union of Mothers' clubs at a recent meeting decided to embark upon a juvenile picture campaign with the ultimate aim of instituting an entire program of juvenile pictures to be shown at a stated time, and stated picture house once a week. A committee of moving picture men will soon be appointed, and it will co-operate with the women to make their campaign possible. As soon as enough mothers promise to allow their children to patronize such a program, it is believed that the local film men will more than do their share. Comedies, romances, education and travel pictures will probably make up the greater part of the programs. So long as no problem plays are included in the shows, the women will not have a word to say about the program. It will be left entirely to the discretion and judgment of the moving picture theatre owners.

CHILDREN'S MATINEES PUT ON IN CALIFORNIA THEATRE

A special series of children's matinees has been put on at the Strand theatre, Berkeley, Cal., this being patterned after the series that proved to be such a success last winter. A program especially adapted for children is presented each Saturday afternoon at a uniform admission price of ten cents, the show bearing the indorsement of the school authorities and several mothers' clubs. The initial performance featured "Little Sunset," with the addition of a juvenile comedy and a Bray cartoon.

BOYS DRESSED AS CHAPLIN RUN THROUGH STREETS

W. A. Kerr, of Kerr Brothers, proprietors of the Empress theatre, Central City, Neb., was showing Charley Chaplin in "Police," when he dressed twelve boys as Chaplins and sent another boy, dressed as a policeman, to chase them through the city, dropping hand bills as they went.

On the stage that night appeared every youngster in town, who thought he could dress to look like Chaplin—and there were many. The applause of the audience decided which boy got the prize for the most truthful make-up.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

The prisoners of Castle Williams, Governor's Island, saw in person last week Valentine Grant, the Famous Players star and vice-president of The Motion Picture Actors Welfare League for Prisoners, when her latest release, "The Daughter of MacGregor," was shown. Sidney Olcott, the director, gave an impromptu speech in which he told how motion pictures were manufactured and then gave the prisoners little snatches of experiences that he has had during the many years that he has directed the movies. Among the notables present were Major General Wood and his staff, Captain Stahl, Commandant of the Prison, Chaplain Warring, Captain Ward and wife, Lieutenant Rucker, Margaret Fielding, the Fox Film star, Myles F. Lasker, chairman of the Arrangement Committee, and a number of newspaper reporters.

The name of Marie Dressler's picture for the World Film Corporation has been changed from "Tillie's Night Out" to "Tillie's Day Off," as most of the wild scenes in which the star was "taken" at Coney Island occurred in the daytime.

The motion picture version of "The Whip," in eight reels, will be acted by Irving Cummings, Dion Titheradge, Paul McAllister, Warren Cooke, Alfred Hemming, Alma Hanlon, June Elvidge and many miscellaneous persons divided between the Saratoga race track and the annual horse show at Long Branch.

Doris Grey and Wayne Arey, co-stars in "Her Beloved Enemy," a Thanhouser feature by Lloyd Lonergan, have just found out who Mr. Arey is in the picture. In order that the acting might be more effective, Ernest Warde, the director, did not tell the entire plot of the story to his company until he arrived at almost the last scene. Here come events that are supposed to surprise the leading characters in the play and Mr. Warde took care that they should be actually as astonished as the spectators will be when they see the picture.

Florence La Badie was almost lost to the Thanhouser Film Corporation a few nights ago when night scenes were being made for "Divorce and the Daughter," to be released through the Pathe exchanges.

Miss La Badie was supposed to be fleeing half insane down a dark road, where she is found by Edwin Stanley, who is motoring along the road. Frederic Sullivan, the director, rehearsed the scene in which Miss La Badie was to stagger out in front of the car. When the take came Miss La Badie staggered too far and was knocked down by the car. Director, cameraman and actors rushed to her assistance.

"Pshaw!" Miss La Badie cried out as she was pulled out from under the car. "Why didn't you take it!"

Vincent Serrano in making Thanhouser's "A Modern Monte Cristo," under the direction of Eugene Moore, is having the time of his life. It's a regular vacation for Mr. Serrano, who is spending most of his time in front of the lens swimming and diving and sailing a ship.

Every once in a while the film star seems to think it incumbent upon her to abandon the purely conventional and do something that will startle the natives. Despite her demure appearance, Louise Huff fell a victim to this malady the other day, and drove a racing roadster right straight up on the porch of a rural parsonage, taking one of the porch pillars with her. She wrecked the car and nearly killed Robert G. Vignola, her director and Nat Deverich, his assistant, who were sitting on the porch watching the effect of Miss Huff's approach to the house at top speed. It was an elopement scene for the Famous Players adaptation of "Seventeen," in which Miss Huff and Jack Pickford are co-starring on the Paramount program.

Marguerite Clark Getting Angry

Marguerite Clark is suffering from a severe nervous strain as a result of the staging of "Miss George Washington" at the Famous Players. In this production the little star plays the part of a girl who cannot tell the truth. Her incessant telling of falsehoods is the motive power of the play. As a result of this continuous fibbing in the studio, Miss Clark finds that her word is doubted on every occasion, and is becoming highly incensed at the manner in which everybody refuses to believe a word she says.

"Gracious, is there anybody in the studio who has not kissed me?" demanded Marguerite Courtot the other day after she had spent an entire morning in rehearsing scenes for "The Kiss," in which she is co-starring with Owen Moore at the Famous Players studio. As the title suggests, osculation forms an important part in the story, and, of course, there are always interested young men who have original ideas on the subject when pretty girls are concerned.

When the title was suggested, and it was known that Miss Courtot would play the girl, competition was keen for the opposite role, but Director Del Henderson decreed that Moore was to be the lucky man.

Jack Pickford is rapidly qualifying for the title of Famous Players grouch. He is playing William Sylvanus Baxter in the adaptation of Booth Tarkington's "Seventeen," in which he is co-starring with Louise Huff. It is one of the chief points of William's character that he detests Clematis, the houn' dog, which is the property of Genesis, the family servant. Now, it so happened that the dog which was selected for that role took a violent fancy to Jack the moment he saw him. As a result, Jack has had to spend all his spare moments in being mean to the dog, in order to have it shun him before the camera. It is nearly breaking Jack's heart because he is fond of animals, and the situation is getting on his nerves.

The popularity of the latest Gaumont single-reel "Reel-Life," has made it necessary to secure an editor who will devote his entire time to this release. For this position the Gaumont Company has secured Paul M. Bryan, already well known as a writer of scenarios. In addition to his work in this field, he will also pass as a specialist upon the titles for all Gaumont single-reel releases and photoplays.

Baker Takes Vacation

George D. Baker, of the Metro-Rolfe staff of directors, has gone to Havana for a brief, well-earned vacation. Mr. Baker has been working almost at top speed for several months, and as the studio schedule did not necessitate his presence for two or three weeks, he decided upon a sea trip as the best form of complete rest and relaxation. However, as Mr. Baker is an indefatigable worker, his rest will undoubtedly take the form of an opportunity to write a new photoplay for Metro's use. The director is the author of Emily Stevens' latest screen vehicle, "The Wager," which will be released in November, and of "Tarantula," a recent Vitagraph feature.

Mr. Baker's first production on his return from Havana will be a picturization of Holman F. Day's story, "Squire Flynn," with Lionel Barrymore as star.

Ten members of the Sunset Club, a social organization composed of women more than seventy years old, play ten important roles in "Henry's Thanksgiving," a forthcoming Metro-Drew comedy in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are starred. None of them had ever been inside a motion picture studio until Mrs. Drew arranged for their appearance there. Two of them have never seen a motion picture projected upon the screen. But they will be guests of Mr. and Mrs. Drew at a first run, to be followed by a dinner party.

Henri Bergman, who plays heavy dramatic roles in Metro productions, announces that he wants to drop the "i" and carry the "y" in his first name in the future. About a year ago Mr. Bergman experienced considerable annoyance through the confusing of his name and that of Henry Bergman, who is well known in the musical comedy field. Upon the advice of friends Mr. Bergman decided to change the spelling of his Christian name, purely as a matter of distinction. So he adopted "Henri." The announcement of the change was published both in this country and in England, where Mr. Bergman is also well known. Instead of clearing up matters, Mr. Bergman found that the change caused more annoyance and confusion than ever.

Just One More Automobile

Anita Stewart signalized her recovery from her recent illness by purchasing another motor car. This one is a Mercer.

The Stewart garage at Brightwaters, L. I., now houses a flock of three cars, which makes her the prize automobile magnate of the Vitagraph studio, that is, among the players. She is outshone only by President Albert E. Smith of the company and his fellow executive, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton.

A recent new members of the New York Press Club is Earle Williams, the Vitagraph star. He was enrolled as an associate member and thus becomes one of the very few motion picture actors in this organization.

After two weeks of confinement to his home as a result of the automobile accident near Mineola, Long Island, in which he and Lillian Walker and other Vitagraph players were overturned, Wilfrid North, Miss Walker's director, was able to report again for work at the studio last week.

On October 1 Alice Joyce, Vitagraph star, enjoyed a birthday.

She came to the studio carrying on her wrist a knitted afternoon bag of brilliant colored silk. She displayed it as one of her most cherished gifts.

"Ah," said an admirer of the pretty novelty, "something wrought by the donor's own fair fingers, what?"

Miss Joyce laughed.

"Seeing that it was given me by my husband, Tom Moore," she replied. "I am afraid it was not wrought by his fair fingers."

Yes, that's different. One can't easily imagine Tom knitting.

Harry Morey, with a sword and a belt full of cartridges, was a conspicuous figure one day last week in the Vitagraph studio yard carrying a large morocco-bound Bible under his arm.

The sight aroused a great deal of comment. The hero of J. Stuart Blackton's "Battle Cry of War" has anything but a pacific role to play in that production. The meekness with which he nursed the Bible in his arms aroused the bunch. They twitted him with it.

Mrs. Vernon Castle in "Patria" (Thanhouser)

Mr. Morey explained that he had merely been given the Bible to hold by Director Wm. P. S. Earle, who was using a text from it for an introduction to the picture.

Drew Carried Away by Scene

While doing some scenes in a wine cellar set in "The Girl Philippa" at the Vitagraph studios, Director S. Rankin Drew shed considerable gore. He plays the hero with Anita Stewart as star in this production, and is one of a party trapped in the wine cellar "Somewhere in France." An attempt is made to barricade the door against the enemy soldiers trying to enter. To do this Mr. Drew and Jules Cowles, as Asticot, pile cask after cask before the door. They were real casks, and anyone who has ever handled casks knows they are not mere bagatelles. Mr. Drew threw himself into the cask task with a frenzy that tore his fingers into ribbons. Between this and a retake of the scene he saturated a towel with the blood dripping from his digits and then resumed his labors.

One of the most impressive scenes in "The Flower of Faith," the second of the International's Golden Eagle Features, is the burning of the cabin of Hugh Lee, the unbeliever. Lee, which character is impersonated by Frank Mills, refuses to accept the doctrine of the evangelist, and the superstitious country people take him out to hang him, after a picturesque night ride, which ends in applying the torch to the cabin.

Mrs. Vernon Castle is being screened at Ithaca in the International's preparedness serial, "Patria." In one of the scenes, she is supposed to dance with her leading man, Milton Sills, but unfortunately, Mr. Sills is not an expert dancer. So "Dick" Stewart, who rounds up the supernumeraries, at the Wharton Studio, was instructed to get some person, who would make a suitable partner for Mrs. Castle, and at the same time resemble Mr. Sills.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen
Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, Oct. 8.

THE first negative developing and film printing was done at the new factory at the Ince-Culver City studios last week, and to duly celebrate the opening of this department at the mammoth producing plant, Business Manager E. H. Allen and Laboratory Superintendent Alfred Brandt, personally did the work. Heretofore the developing and printing has been done at the old laboratory of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, adjoining the Keystone studio in Los Angeles. It is the intention to make only the first sample print of Ince-Triangle productions and Ince features at the new laboratories. The other prints will be made at the eastern laboratories of the company.

The new laboratories are models for efficiency patterned after the plans of the Eastman studios at Rochester. The main building is 60 by 120 feet, and a few feet distant is a power plant and boiler room, housed in a separate building 30 by 30. Both are of fireproof construction, being of steel and concrete. The laboratory is fitted with Angelus printer, Pacific Tank and Pipe Company tanks; has an ice making machine; air and water filtering system, and the building throughout is fitted with fire shutters. The laboratory contains twenty-four mammoth drums, which make possible the finishing of a sufficient quantity of film for all the prints needed, should it be found advisable to make the prints at the studio factory.

At one end of the laboratory is a storage vault with two foot walls on all sides. In the building is a theatre for the use of the laboratory men, fitted with a Baird projection machine. This gives the fourth theatre for the Ince Culver City studios. An emergency concrete tank with a capacity of fifty thousand gallons has been built a short distance from the laboratories, and water will be obtained here for use in case of accident to the municipal plant at Culver City.

Minimum of Fire Hazard

Business Manager Allen has paid particular attention to the construction of this in order to secure a factory that has the minimum fire hazard, and representatives of insurance companies have assured him that this building is superior with respect to fire protection to any on the west coast.

Stars of the Ince Culver City studios, heads of several departments and Los Angeles trade paper representatives, were the guests of John Ringling, general manager of Barnum and Bailey's circus, one afternoon and evening during the visit of the circus to Los Angeles last week. The party began at five o'clock, when all were ushered into the mess tent and ate "dinner" with the freaks, the menu being the regular one for the circus folks. Two hours were spent visiting the many departments of interest behind the scenes, and taking pictures of players in the side show and menagerie. The forty odd viewed the evening performance from a pile of straw placed immediately in front of the box seats. Many features of circus life were explained or shown to the guests, and when the circus left town, all Ince players were satisfied to continue before the camera.

Besides Business Manager Allen, who was chaperone of the party, Mr. Ringling's guests were Dorothy Dalton, Clara Williams, Enid Markey, Margery Wilson, Margaret Thompson, Louise Glaum, Wm. S. Hart, Howard Hickman, Frank Keenan, Charles Ray, Charles Gunn; Directors Raymond B. West, Reginald Barker, Charles Miller, Walter Edwards, Art Director Robert Brunton, Production Superintendent Dave Hartford, Director of Publicity K. Anthony O'Hara, H. A. Keeler; E. V. Durling, Telegraph; C. W. Post, Triangle publicity writer; Mabel Condon, Dramatic Mirror, and J. C. Jessen, Motion Picture News.

On the following day the principals of the executive staff, many of the leading artists, in all numbering about fifty, and including John Ringling, owner of the Barnum and Bailey circus, were entertained at the Ince studios by Business Manager E. H. Allen and principals. The sawdust ring people saw a number of scenes made, and renewed acquaintance with a number of the Ince staff, who were formerly connected with the theatrical or circus world.

John Ringling stated this was his first visit to a motion picture studio, and he was amazed at the scope and permanancy of the plant.

Director Reginald Barker was back at the Ince studio this week, after spending ten days in the Yosemite Valley on a vacation. He could not forget the worries of picture-craft, and while in the country's greatest national park and adjoining territory, located many spots of picturesque beauty which he hopes to use for scenes. The artistic director acquired a great coat of tan, and will shortly be ready to resume work with more vigor than formerly.

Bennett Arrives in Culver City

Enid Bennett, recently engaged by Thomas H. Ince in New York, arrived at the Culver City studios Friday, and after a number of film tests were made, the scenario department selected her first story, which is now being altered to suit. The working script is being prepared by Monte Katterjohn.

Two Interesting Scenes from Lasky's "Witchcraft," in Which Is Featured Fannie Ward

A Dip Into the Primitive, by Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson in "The Barriers of Society," a Red Feather

"Jim Grimsby's Boy" is the definite title selected for the Ince Triangle subject, featuring Frank Keenan and Enid Markey, which will be released shortly. This is the first Ince subject from the pen of Lanier Bartlett, and is spoken of as the most picturesque drama ever made at the Ince plant. It is a pathetic story of a mountain girl of the gold country, the daughter of a grouchy father. Miss Markey appears in practically every scene, she playing the title role, which is said to be the most exacting ever attempted by her. Reginald Barker directed this picture, which has a strong cast of Ince players.

William S. Hart will have Margery Wilson as his leading woman in the new production which was taken up last week. This is a western drama by Monte Katterjohn, which gives Hart the role of a new characterization of a gun-fighter. Interior scenes for the Hart picture are being made at the Culver City studio, and upon the completion of these, the western actor and his aggregation of buccaroos will return to the hills, valleys and plateaus of Inceville.

The administration building of the Ince Culver City studios served as an exterior setting for a scene in the subject Raymond B. West is now filming with Louise Glaum, Charles Ray and Dorothy Dalton as stars. This is the first time any of the new buildings which constitute the Culver City plant have been used for a "location." Westy and Miss Glaum are using their waiting moments in the training of a marmoset, recently received from South America. This small representative of the monkey tribe has conbinced both director and actress that what he lacks in size he makes up in fierceness, for both have been scratched and bitten numerous times. Miss Glaum will use the marmoset as a pet in scenes in this production.

The Ince cameraman had a narrow escape last week. Bob Newhart was filming the approach of a train with camera setting on the track, and the engineer having misunderstood the orders, came near running him down, when the train was run to the station beyond the camera, when it was the order that it be stopped just before it reached the camera. Clyde DeVinna is in Culver City hospital with a displaced kneecap, as the result of a fall from his motorcycle, while riding to the studio from Los Angeles.

Edwards in Charge of Down East Story

Director Walter Edwards will next be in charge of filming a down east story, having completed the Louisiana-Mississippi river story. Continuity for the new photodrama is being prepared by J. G. Hawks.

"Bugs," the comedy drama being made under the direction of Paul Powell, from the story and scenario by William E. Wing, will serve to introduce new microscopic motion pictures made by a process invented by Louis H. Tolhurst of Los Angeles. Tolhurst became interested in motion pictures more than two years ago from the educational standpoint, and has perfected a new process for photographing germs and other representatives of the smallest form of animal life.

Tolhurst and Wing have formed a partnership, and following the completion of this picture, plan to manufacture additional subjects for schools and colleges. "Bugs" will show the Tolhurst-Wing acting microbes, some of which while not being as large as the point of a pin, will occupy the entire screen and show their fierceness in numerous ways. Wilfred Lucas, Constance Talmadge and F. A. Turner have consented to play important parts in this subject, which stars microbes. Director Paul Powell has found ideal locations at San Jacinto, where the company will go for the making of exterior scenes for this small town drama. The plot has to do with an eccentric physician, falling in love with a maid whose hubby is the collection of stamps. The girl's father is a wealthy retired farmer, who is "bled" by a quack doctor. The maid at the home falls in love with the quack, and her sweetheart kills him. Circumstantial evidence points to the collector of stamps as guilty of the crime, and the physician by microscopic analysis proves her innocence, and the guilt of the real murderer. This part gives Constance Talmadge her first appearance in Fine Art-Triangle subjects, she having been working under the director of Mr. Griffith in the part of the mountain girl in "Intolerance."

May Cloy (American)

"Everybody's Doing It" is the title given the Triangle Komedy, formerly known as "The Rescuers." Featured in this farce, are George Stone and Violet Radcliffe, who take the roles of messenger boys. Tod Browning directed this two reeler, the plot of which hinges on the efforts of the two children to write scenarios for motion picture companies.

Lloyd Ingram, who has just returned from New York, where he filmed "American Aristocracy," starring Douglas Fairbanks with Jewel Carmen as the feminine lead, has been assigned to direct a story written by Frank E. Woods, manager of production of the Fine Arts Studio. The temporary title of this is "The Children Pay." Lillian Gish has the star part, and opposite her will be Keith Armour. The entire cast includes Loyola O'Connor, Jennie Lee, and others.

"Intolerance" for Los Angeles on the 16th

Announcement received from D. W. Griffith last week by his personal representative, W. E. Keefe, is to the effect that the first public showing of "Intolerance," will be given in Los Angeles, Monday, October 16. Clune's Auditorium, a three thousand seat house will be the scenes of the premier. Previously it was announced that "Intolerance" would go to the Majestic theatre, as it was then expected the Clune Company production of Harold Bell Wright's California novel, "The Eyes of the World," would be on at the large Clune theatre. D. W. Griffith will arrive in Los Angeles this week to personally supervise the presentation of his latest artistic spectacle success.

Joseph Henabery, who has served as assistant to D. W. Griffith in the making of "Intolerance," has been placed in charge of directing a Fine Art company, and now has a story in rehearsal, known as "The Feud Brakers." A number of the well-known players of the studio including the kiddies, will appear in this.

J. P. McGowan and players of the Helen Holmes Signal Serial Company, have overcome their nomadic inclinations, and found exceptional conditions at El Portal at the entrance of Yosemite valley. For ten days they wandered over the lumber district of northern and central California, in search of favorable climatic conditions, and where scenic locations would be suitable.

At this place, Director McGowan will have opportunity to secure trains from Merced, California, and the players will be in the heart of the lumber district, where correct atmosphere locations can be secured for the remainder of the serial, "Lass of the Lumberlands." The experiences of the several members of the company, including the technical man, who drove from the northern location at Arcata to the Yosemite Valley in a two ton truck, if filmed would have made the greatest photoplay of adventure the screen has ever known.

Director McGowan and players have the distinction of being the first motion picture company to secure the privilege of making motion pictures other than of an educational or travelogue nature inside the Yosemite Valley National Park. Here will be found the most beautiful mountain scenery imaginable, and in addition the lumber camp atmosphere can be secured a few miles away.

The company is stopping at the world famed Hotel del Portal, and there Paul C. Hurst and Leo D. Maloney became heroes in reality. They saved the hotel from fire, when they discovered smoke coming from the private office of the landlord at two a.m. The two Signal players fought the fire out with rugs from the floor of the office, and prevented a possible panic, when they stopped the frightened bell boy from turning in a fire alarm. Every one wants to know what the players were doing up at this hour in the morning.

Proud Boys, Those Cracker Box Philosophers

Director McGowan has just one complaint to make regarding this location—he cannot secure extra help. The store box whittlers of the town look upon the screen art as a low form of obtaining a livelihood, and to use their own words, "refuse to be dolled up with them face lotions."

L. Frank Baum, author of fairy stories produced on the legitimate stage, and latter filmed by the Oz Film Company, has written a libretto for the Mrs. Carter H. Harrison story "Silver Wings," and music has been written by Dr. Hugo Felix of Vienna. As soon as the play is produced, screen version will be prepared and filmed.

The Lasky studio is fast becoming known as the rendezvous of weird organizations, festive or otherwise. Not so long ago we learned of the Poet's Corner. Then came the formation of a company of coast artillery, and at another time the Lasky Rowing and Yachting Association was heralded as a reality. But the most recent mentioned is the Lasky Never Again Club. A sleuth sent to learn more of these organizations, discovered a broken down typewriter, where a pipe had been cleaned, and a large easy chair which formerly had been occupied by Kenneth McGaffey. The business office of the Lasky plant, advise that Mr. McGaffey had been called from town on important business, and with him it was found, departed the score of sacred "tongs."

Wallace Reid, Lasky star, is spending a week at San Francisco, the guest of Herman Wabber of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, and Jack Partington of the Imperial theatre. Reid sought protection on this wild jaunt, and so surrounded himself by the publicity department.

"The Soul of Kara-San," the Japanese photoplay being completed by Director Edward J. LeSaint, he will take up the filming of another production similar in character, which has Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuru Aoki as the principals. In the production just finished, Mr. Hayakawa was supported by Myrtle Stedman, loaned by the Pallas Pictures and a cast of Japanese players.

Director Frank Reicher has in rehearsal a new Lasky photoplay, which will offer Fannie Ward as star, and the publicity department gives out the information that Miss Ward will appear in overalls in most of the scenes.

Neilan Completes "Barnegat"

Marshall Neilan has completed his first Lasky photoplay "The Tides of Barnegat," which stars Blanche Sweet. Neilan will continue to direct Miss Sweet, and he has now his second cast in rehearsal. Title for the new production is not definitely known.

Cleo Ridgely, who has been absent from the Lasky studio for the past month on a vacation, has returned and will shortly begin work in a co-starring production with Wallace Reid.

Robert Leonard, recently added to the Lasky organization as director, is now busy with the filming of his first subject for this company. Mae Murray is the star, and Elliott Dexter plays the lead opposite. Incidently it may be said that Dexter is leading a most strenuous life. He is playing in three photoplays at one time. Under Director James Young, he appears opposite Marie Doro, with Marshall Neilan, is the principal support for Blanche Sweet, and the remainder of the day he devotes to changing costumes and makeup that he may support Mae Murray.

"The Wrath of Cactus Moore," a "U"

Director Henry Otto has again put on the makeup, the first time for more than three years, and he will appear in an important part, acting in the current Yorke-Metro subject, "Big Tremaine," which has Harold Lockwood and May Allison as its stars. Otto, previous to his work as director, was actor on the legitimate stage, and played heavy parts in many Selig productions.

Director Otto was an extremely busy man, for he used more than one hundred extra players in scenes depicting political campaign rallies. Equal suffrage plays an important part in a number of scenes for this production, when May Allison campaigns for her sweetheart, who is a candidate for Congress. She leads a throng to his home, a beautiful colonial mansion, built especially for the scene, and from the porch of this Lockwood delivers an important address, in which he promises every voter he will buy them a Ford automobile if elected.

Fire at the Rolin studios at Court and North Olive street, last week, caused damage to the property estimated at a thousand dollars. The fire is thought to have been caused by spontaneous combustion. It was discovered by carpenters about eight o'clock in the morning, and the quick response of the fire department saved the entire building from destruction. All negative and positive prints at the studio at the time were first removed. This served to prevent the spreading of the flames, and being confined to one part of the building. The work of the technical staff prevented serious loss to the company.

General Manager Dwight Whiting, who puts in his time now directing the juvenile Rolin Slapstick company, has finished the making of a boarding house comedy, which has Fatty Lampton and Margaret Nichols as principals.

Billy Fay of the Rolin stock company, who was injured about two months ago in an automobile accident, has returned to the studio, and will shortly be seen in a Rolin comedy.

Half of the stage space at the Rolin studio is being enclosed, and an equipment of lights is being added to make possible undelayed production during the rainy season, which will begin in December.

Final Scenes at Selig

Both producing organizations of the Selig Company are making the final scenes for their respective productions. Helen Ware has completed her work before the camera, for the eight or nine-reel production "The Garden of Allah," and has departed for the east to take up another engagement. Director Colin Campbell has a few additional scenes to make, and will then depart for Chicago, where he will supervise the laboratory work on the making of prints for this picture.

About the same conditions are true with the "Light of Western Stars," the ten-reel western picture with Tom Mix and Bessie Eyton in the principal roles. Director E. A. Martin is now busy with the cutting of this picture, and upon the completion of this task, will go East to complete plans for the filming of the big twelve-reel subject dealing with the history of the United States.

"Ham the Mechanic" brought woe to members of the Kalem Comedy Company, under the direction of Lloyd V. Hamilton. The script provides that Ham and Bud, who build a garage in a lonely road, should sprinkle puncturing material on the highway, and thus secure business. The tacks, glass and nails failed to work, when they ran the company cars over in the making of scenes, but the nails were very effective when another auto driver came by in a big touring car. Everyone of his tires picked a nail or a tack. All laid the blame on poor Bud, and for a moment they were afraid it meant the hospital for him, but Bud's meek explanation won favor with the angry man, and instead of a hospital bill the company has sent a check for tire repairs.

Walter Morton, late director at the Universal, has been engaged to direct the production of future Hazard of Helen subjects, made at the Glendale studio of the Kalem Company.

Nevada Company Off for Tropics

Members of the Nevada Film Company producing staff, which is to make "The Planter," adapted from the South American story by Herman Whitaker, will leave Los Angeles October 9 for New Orleans, where they will take the United Fruit liner for Post Barrios, on the east coast of Central America. From there they will go inland to Guatemala City, which will be used as a base for their activities. The producing organization will remain in the tropics for twelve weeks securing a greater portion of the scenes for this rubber plantation story.

Herman Whitaker, the author, has gone to Guatemala in advance of the company, and he was accompanied by technical men, who took all props and effects necessary, and will have a studio ready for work upon the arrival of the organization. Seventeen people will comprise the producing organization, and this is said to be the largest ever leaving Los Angeles for a tour of such length as this. John E. Ince is director, Joseph Boyle, assistant director, William Black and Roberto Turnbull, cameramen, and Carlyle Robinson, private secretary to Ince and director of publicity.

Tyrone Power will have the star part, that of Dom, an Austrian Jew of brute-like character with respect to human beings; Lamar Johnston, juvenile lead, and the supporting cast includes Edith Sterling, Jean Taylor, George O'Dell, Louis Fitzroy, and Mrs. Harry Davenport as principals.

After the Guatemala scenes are made, the company will go to New York, and there select a new cast for all parts except that taken by Johnston, and will then go to location in the New England states for scenes in the early part of the story. C. J. Ward, general manager of the Nevada Company, will maintain office in Los Angeles, and supervise the management from here.

Director Jack Conway has completed "The Main Spring," which gives Ben Wilson the dual role of the son of a financier and a newspaper reporter, and Conway will next have the direction of Ella Hall in a five-reel photodrama "Mary Keep Your Feet Still." The cast is now being made up. In "The Main Spring," a reporter is sent to learn of the condition of a leader in finance, and because of his close resemblance to the broker's son, is ushered into the home. Following this he has many adventures, and is placed in a position where he can avenge a man who has ruined his father financially. Francelia Billington plays the feminine lead, and the cast is made up of such well-known players as Wilbur Higby, Thomas Jefferson, Mark Robbins and others.

Another five-reel picture taken up at U City last week, is titled "The Reward of the Faithless," which gives to Wedgwood Nowell a very excellent part with many decided dramatic situations. He takes the role of a handsome youth, who has several love affairs, but finally comes to a tragic end. This is an original scenario by a staff author, and besides Nowell, the principals appearing in this are Cleo Madison, Nick DuNaew, Dick Lareno and others. The story is laid in Russia and New York City, and a number of special sets will be required for its production, one being that of a street of a small Russian city.

Johnson Featured in "Kingdom"

Director Lloyd B. Carleton is now rehearsing players for the filming of a five-reel photodrama titled "Of Such Is the Kingdom of Heaven," written by a Los Angeles dramatic critic, Henry C. Warnack. Emory Johnson has a featured part in this, as has also Richard Morris, character actor.

Director Raymond Wells is busy with the filming of "The Little Queen of Nowhere Land," with Ruth Stonehouse in the name part, Jack Mulhall in the opposite lead, and a cast which includes Jean Hersholt as the heavy, and other well-known Universal players. It is the tale of adventure of an American cowboy, who becomes successful as a miner, and in seeking enjoyment after accumulating wealth, finds his way to the imaginary kingdom. There a condition almost equivalent to anarchy prevails, and the cowboy becomes the leader of the queen's army, and when he is successful in vanquishing the foe, he is declared the king. Director Wells is also the author of the story.

A typical southwestern international border story is that titled "Mixed Blood," written by Willard Mack, with script by a Universal staff author. Charles Swickard has been place in charge of the filming of this five reeler, with George Beranger and Roy Stewart in the principal male parts, and Claire McDowell the leading woman.

"The Last of the Morgans" is a two-reel story being produced by Director William V. Mong, who plays the title role, supported by Harry Holden, Nellie Allen and others.

"The Amazing Adventure," adapted from a magazine story of the same name, and prepared for the screen by Harvey Gates, has an unusual plot. The mystery is not revealed until in the last few scenes of the picture. Roberta Wilson has the featured part.

Director Allen Holubar has completed his character sketch two-reel picture, "The Old Toy-Maker," in which he takes the leading role, that of a German who came to America. His wife and child who followed later, were lost at sea. He made a doll to resemble, as nearly as he could remember, his little daughter, and he comes to worship this, especially in his dreams. This makes possible a number of fade-ins, which show a story of the heart throb type.

Director Henry McRae is filming a two-reel scenario by William Parker, which contains a baffling murder mystery. It has been titled "The Hand In the Dark." E. N. Wallock takes the character part, Edith Johnson is the daughter, and Jack Kerrigan the lover.

Messrs. Willis-Woods have supplied the Universal with a scenario titled "Dead O' Night," which Douglas Girrard is now producing. George Beranger appears as the son, Director Girrard as the heavy, the doctor, and Ruth Clifford takes the feminine lead.

Upon the conclusion of this, Girrard will film "The Mouse," the title referring to a girl, a young man of wealth had taken from an orphanage and educated. Willard Wayne, Betty Schade, and Nanine Wright, support Ruth Clifford and Mr. Girrard in this short subject.

"Lord Fairfax Visits America" is the title of a program, subject being made by Director Donald Donald, with Lee Hill, Lois Weber and Harry Carter as the principals. The latter appears as the lord who disguises, and has his secretary pretend he is the blue-blooded one. By this means he is able to find a desirable wife.

George Cochrane has been busy for the past ten weeks, filming a decided melodrama entitled "Eleven to One." The twelve of the title refer to jurymen, the eleven being in favor of acquitting a man charged with murder, when the evidence is purely circumstantial. After being out eleven hours, the twelfth man becomes conscience stricken and admits his guilt. The principals in this are Jack Nellson, Burton Law, Charles Cummings, and Grace Bonyng.

"Her Brother Was a Broker"

Director John MacDermott is directing a Willis-Woods single-reel picture, titled "Her Brother Was a Broker." It is the story of a country girl going to the city to find her brother, and there becomes the victim of white slavers.

"Beau Brummell Junior" is the title given a two-reel college life comedy by Bess Meredyth. The principals are Carter and Mrs. Flora Parker DeHaven. It pertains to an American youth, disowned by his parents, because of college escapades, going to South America, and there making good from the start, and by accident, and then there is a meeting of father and son, former sweethearts, and the romance goes on.

Director W. W. Beaudine has in the past three weeks filmed three single-reel comedies, "His First Arrest," "Lashed by Love," and "Bombs and Business."

Lillian Peacock and Gale Henry were injured while making a scene showing an automobile going over a cliff for the making of "Bombs and Business." Miss Peacock sustained a fractured wrist, and Miss Henry's knee was badly wrenched.

Director Stuart Paton is still on the two-reel mystery story, "The Voice on the Wire," which has Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber as principals.

Hobart Henley will direct and play the lead in the making of the film version of the Willard Mack story "Little Italy." Gertrude Selby will be his leading woman.

Rupert Julian has completed the filming of "We Are French," and is now preparing scenario for a multiple reel feature "The Mistress." Julian himself will play a leading part, but the other members of the cast have not been selected.

CHANGES AND PROMOTIONS ARE MADE IN DEPARTMENTS OF PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORPORATION

A number of changes and promotions were effected during the past week in Paramount Pictures Corporation, immediately following the resignation of Wallace Thompson, who had been the Director of Publications and Advertising, for the Corporation, and the promotion of Kenneth Hodkinson to manager of Paramount.

With the resignation of Mr. Thompson, the officers of the Corporation promoted a number the men who had served under Mr. Thompson and have given them the full responsibility of their departments, which had been under his jurisdiction. Charles C. Burr was named manager of the Advertising Department; Charles E. Moyer, Manager of Publicity; Harry I. Day, Editor of Picture Progress, a monthly magazine and Paramount Progress, Paramount's weekly exhibitors house organ; William Hurst, Managing Director of the Paramount Pictographs; and a new sales promotion department will be inaugurated immediately under the direction of Manager Hodkinson and William W. Hines.

Practically all of the new managers of the different departments have grown up with the organization and were employees when it was still in its infancy a year and a half ago.

NEW RECRUIT FOR METRO PICTURE

Gladys Alexandria has been engaged for the part of Ellen in "The Sunbeam," the most important feminine role next to that of the star, Mabel Taliaferro. "The Sunbeam" will follow "The Dawn of Love" on the Metro program.

"The Sunbeam" is Miss Alexandria's first motion picture, her experience having been in dramatic productions and in vaudeville. She played the leading part in "The Miracle Man," replacing Gail Kane, and also was Henrietta Crossman's leading woman in "The Tongues of Men." She has been stock star with the Keith stock company in Toledo. Miss Alexandria has had three sketches in vaudeville, her most recent being "Broadway Love."

The new recruit to pictures is a Canadian by birth, Toronto being her home city. She has a sister, Vivian Martin, in vaudeville. Miss Alexandria brings to the screen a charming presence, classic features, and the pantomimic ability which has always been evident even in her work on the speaking stage.

WILLIAM N. SELIG STRONG ADVOCATE OF QUALITY

"Haste makes waste in motion picture production as elsewhere," says William N. Selig. "I have decided to observe no stated schedules for my feature film productions. Formerly, I was obliged to release a five-reel feature play once a month and sometimes twice monthly. I have changed all this with our new releasing agency, the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. Hereafter my Red Seal Plays will be released as completed without any rushing. If it takes two months to complete a five-reel photoplay satisfactorily, well and good. The time has come when it must be quality and not quantity."

Pathe's Vice President Joins National Association

J. A. Berst Enthusiastic Over the Defeat of Senator Cristman by the Efforts of Exhibitors' Association

THE defeat of Senator Cristman at the New York primaries recently by reason of the active opposition of the motion picture interests was the direct cause of J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, becoming a member of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The value of co-operation in defeating a man whose views on censorship constituted a menace to the best interests of the industry was so clearly shown that Mr. Berst, who has been active in fighting local and state censorship, decided to support the new organization.

Mr. Berst, when seen recently at his office, said: "Branch Managers as well as all other employees of motion picture manufacturers and distributors should unite with the exhibitors to defeat for re-election any state senator or assemblyman who takes an unreasonable position toward this industry. Every candidate for state legislative office should be visited before election by delegates from the motion picture business and asked as to his attitude toward the business. If his views are hostile he should be fought to a finish with the powerful weapon of screen publicity which has been shown to be so valuable. I congratulate the Exhibitors' League."

Fox Engages Triumvirate of Well-Known Actors

Contracts Signed with Monroe Salisbury, Harry Carey and William Clifford, All of Whom Start Work at Once

MONROE SALISBURY, Harry Carey and William Clifford, three photoplayers of note, have been added to the William Fox acting forces. All will appear in productions now being made on the West Coast.

By a strange coincidence, Mr. Salisbury played for two years in William Farnum's great stage success "The Prince of India," in which he had the role of Demedos, and made his first camera appearance under Director Oscar C. Apfel, of whose company Farnum is now the star.

Both his stage and screen careers have been decidedly versatile. Before entering the silent drama, Mr. Salisbury, who was born in Buffalo, did brilliant work in the "legitimate." For an entire season of fifty weeks, he played twelve different leads every six days. The quality of his performances attracted the attention of Richard Mansfield, and that distinguished actor engaged him as the juvenile in his company.

Then followed two years with Katherine Kidder, three with Mrs. Fiske, two seasons in "The Prince of India," and one year in support of Nance O'Neil. Since his film debut in January, 1914, he has been in many productions.

He is a graduate of St. Vincent's College, and is one of those who took a complete course in Shakesperian training, under the famous Rose Eytinge, in New York City.

Harry Carey, the second of the newly added triumvirate, is an author, actor and plainsman, whose varied experiences have increased his ability as a movie man, and aid him in giving the screen exceptional subjects of a western type.

Some of the plays which he himself wrote and starred in, are "Montana," "Heart of Alaska," "Five Women and That Man" and "Dacotah."

His vaudeville experience is extensive; his stock experience doubly so. For some time he was a prospector and a cowboy, and the strenuous life developed his athletic prowess so thoroughly that he returned to New York City, and held the middleweight boxing championship of the entire state for many years.

He is a graduate of the Hamilton Military Academy and New York University.

William Clifford has been in motion pictures for seven years with a half-dozen of the biggest companies in the industry. He is now working in the cast with Gladys Brockwell in Director Frank Lloyd's first William Fox production.

Mr. Clifford's name became widely known during the eighteen years in which he played with Robert Mantell, Walker Whiteside and Mildred Holland. He is a native of New Orleans, but was educated in Toronto, and is a graduate of the Conservatory of Music in that city.

PRESIDENT WILSON SHOWN ON HORSEBACK IN PATHE NEWS

The first pictures ever taken of President Wilson on horseback were shown in the Pathe News of October 4.

While Col. Roosevelt was president, many photographs were published showing him mounted on his favorite hourse, leaping fences, or riding with chosen friends. Come to think of it, it is hard to imagine President Wilson, otherwise than at his desk or in his library.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Pay in Advance Plan Put Into Operation by All Leading Exchanges in North Western Canada

The Vancouver head office of the Dominion Exclusives, Limited, handling the distribution of the Fox features throughout Western Canada, has been moved from the Leigh Spencer Building to the Orpheum Theatre Building, which is fast becoming the film center of the city. Manager E. R. Fauser's new quarters are on the fifth floor of the building.

E. A. Auger, general superintendent of branches in the United States and Canada for the Mutual Film Corporation, and known to a wide circle of friends as "Tiny," on account of his extreme bulk, recently spent a few days with manager C. R. Dippie of the local office, in the course of a trip of inspection covering the West. Mr. Auger was one of the pioneers in the film business in British Columbia, having acted as the first representative of the General Film Company in this territory.

The film exchanges of British Columbia, all of which are situated in Vancouver, have just put into effect the pay-in-advance plan, and this system will hereafter apply to all exhibitors in the province. The exchanges decided that in the face of the poor collections in some quarters, there was no other course to be pursued, and although there was considerable objection to the plan on the part of exhibitors, it is pointed out by the exchange managers that the responsible exhibitor, who pays his bills, really reaps an advantage by having his less responsible competitor forced to pay up or go out of business.

On September 25, following the lead of British Columbia, the same rule was put in effect by all exchanges located in Calgary, Alberta, and serving not only all theatres in that province, but also a number in western Saskatchewan and a few towns in eastern British Columbia. Thus almost the entire Dominion is now under the pay-in-advance system, and exchange managers are united in declaring that there will be no return to the old method.

New Theatre for Moose Jaw

The Allen theatre at Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, has just been added to the fast growing number of exceptional moving picture houses which are gradually replacing the old-time store shows in Western Canada. The ownership and operation of the Allen are vested in the Allen Theatre Company, Limited, which also controls the Allen theatre in Calgary, Alberta, and the Rex in Regina, Sask. The officers of the company, which is capitalized at $225,000 are: B. Allen, of Winnipeg, president; Jule Allen, of Toronto, vice-president; and Jay J. Allen, of Toronto, secretary. A. J. McKelvie is manager of the new house, under the supervision of H. L. Gage of Regina, who has just been appointed general manager of the Allen houses in Saskatchewan.

President B. Allen went to Moose Jaw for the opening, and many leading people of the city attended, admission being confined exclusively on the opening night to those holding invitation cards.

The general color scheme of the theatre is terra cotta and blue, with a tapestry effect in gray extending from a wainscoting composed of large tiles. There are several hundred lights on the front of the house, and the lobby doors have been so arranged that this space can be kept warm and comfortable during the winter months, so that waiting patrons will not be subjected to the severity of the weather. The rest rooms for ladies will be open at all times, regardless of whether or not a performance is in progress.

The foyer occupies the entire space under the balcony, so that none of the seats are located under a low ceiling, the last row of orchestra seats being placed even with the edge of the balcony. Seats downstairs are of leather, while those in the balcony are upholstered in plush.

Although there is no thought at the present time of presenting anything but motion pictures in the house, provision has been made for the future by the installation of a large stage and scenic equipment, so that if desired vaudeville or legitimate attractions may be played.

Sixth Des Moines Exchange Will Soon Be in Operation—Li Bieu Believes in Stunts

THE sixth exchange to distribute film out of Des Moines will soon be in operation. It is that of the recently organized Mid-West Photo Play Corporation, of which A. H. Blank, of Des Moines, is president. Although the main exchange of this company will be in Kansas City, the executive offices and a branch exchange will be maintained there. This is the company which bought the State rights in Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri for the new Clara Kimball Young pictures.

The second and third floors of the Garden Theatre Building are being converted into inspection and shipping rooms. The exchange will also release pictures of the Garden Feature Film Company. Mr. Blank was in Des Moines for two days last week. He got here on a Sunday morning after a trip to New York and Kansas City. He returned to New York the following Monday night. On his return he promised to announce developments that would be very important to exhibitors of Iowa. Mr. Blank, in addition to being president of the Mid-West Photo Play Corporation, will act as manager of the exchange.

"Nothing new here," said C. E. Smith, manager of the Metro Exchange, "except that we recently installed a new film renovator."

John Shipley, publicity agent for the Riverview Park management in Des Moines, has accepted a position with the "Birth of a Nation" Company, operating out of Minneapolis.

A recent visitor to the Des Moines exchanges was A. N. Blakley, special representative of the Enterprise Optical Company, of Chicago.

Nat Barach, who was recently made manager of the World Exchange, at Dallas, Texas, will be remembered by exchange men and exhibitors of Iowa. Mr. Barach was for some time a traveler in this State for the Metro Film Service.

Nothing has yet been done about reviving the Des Moines Screen Club. This organization, once a very promising body, has practically ceased existence and will probably be in this condition for some time. The exchange men of Des Moines are a very cordial and aggressive bunch, and it seems rather peculiar that they would allow such a progressive movement as this to die without any effort to keep it alive. It was thought that the winter season would see a few social functions put on by the Screen Club, but unless something is started soon this will not occur.

Word has been received in Des Moines of the marriage of J. A. Conant, formerly road man in Iowa for the Metro. Mr. Conant, who is now with the V-L-S-E in Cleveland, chose as his wife, Miss Gladys Lossing, of Bowling Green, Ohio.

R. C. Li Beau, manager of the Des Moines Film and Supply Company, Paramount distributors, is one executive who believes strongly in pulling off "freak" stunts to introduce pictures to the public. Whenever he talks to his exhbitors, he always puts in a good word about doing out-of-the-ordinary things to attract attention. And when he does get hold of this type of an exhibitor he immediately gets a complete review of the stunt and forwards it to Paramount headquarters in New York; sends a copy to Lee D. Balsley, manager of the publicity department of the Kansas City Feature Film Company, of which the Des Moines firm is a branch, for use in the house organ; and he gives a copy to Motion Picture News representative. "Nothing like boosting the exhibitors in your own territory," says Mr. Li Beau.

ADVERTISING CARD BROUGHT OUT BY BOWLES IS A SUCCESS

The success of the card advertising which George H. Bowles, publicity manager of the Kansas City Universal Exchange, has been so marked that he has received orders from the large cities of Oklahoma City, St. Louis; Atlanta, Georgia; Indianapolis, New Orleans, Chicago, Boston and Philadelphia, for the attractive advertising. Mr. Bowles prints the cards at Kansas City and sends them to the different cities. The name of the city to which they are sent is printed on the cards.

Mr. Bowles has also been getting orders for the Universal Weekly, which he edits, and which in the past three months has grown to national proportions. Large orders of these papers have been gotten out and sent to many large cities all over the country, including San Francisco, Chicago and New York.

The importance of the paper in the mind of the patrons in the territory surrounding Kansas City is shown on every hand.

KANSAS CITY SCREEN CLUB IN DIFFICULTIES

It recently was brought to the attention of the Kansas City Screen Club that the club-house built by them would have to be paid for. Accordingly on the latest meeting it was decided that the club should be incorporated for an amount large enough to cover the expenses of the building—about three thousand dollars. The president, Frank Newman, proprietor of the Royal theatre, has made the statement that each member of the club would be allowed to buy from two to ten shares at $5 and $10 per share. It is in this way that the club expects to raise the necessary funds. Some action of this nature was necessary, and this seemed the best way out of the difficulty.

CHANGES IN KANSAS CITY EXCHANGES

C. W. Potter of Kansas City has resigned as advertising agent of the "Yellow Menace" in the United Film Service. L. J. Schlaefer, who years ago worked for the United Film Service in western Canada, and later with the Universal exchange in Seattle, Wash., and with the Unicorn exchange in Chicago, will handle the "Yellow Menace" in Kansas City from now on. Mr. Schlaefer intends to get out some new advertising, which will attract much attention in the city. Mr. Schlaefer, under Joe Levy, manager of the local exchange, will also take care of the publicity of the Omaha branch.

LEVY MAKES TOUR OF THE MIDDLE WEST

M. A. Levy, president of the United Film Service of Chicago, stopped in Kansas City, recently, coming from the West. Mr. Levy had been making a tour of the West to see for himself the result of the serial "The Yellow Menace." Mr. Levy received a telegram while in Kansas City, making it necessary that he return at once to Denver to take care of some important business.

San Francisco Film Exchanges Enjoying Prosperous Season; Pathe Exchange Will Move to Market Street

A VERY marked revival in business is being noted in film exchange circles in San Francisco, and exchange managers are now looking forward to one of the best fall and winter seasons in the history of the business. During the past month there have been a large number of houses reopened throughout northern and central California that had been closed for the summer season, and several fine new theaters have been placed in commission in this city and in Oakland, enlarging the field materially.

Manager X. K. Stout, of the local Mutual office, is wearing a broad smile as a result of the increase in business and of the healthy demand for Chaplin productions. The only disturbing feature at the present time is the lack of adequate facilities at the present location on Turk street. Efforts have been made for some time to secure more advantageous quarters, but so far no arrangements along this line have been concluded. Several building sites are available on Film Row, as Golden Gate avenue is now known, and it is believed that the owners of these will shortly arrange to erect structures that can be used for film exchange purposes.

The All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., is meeting with unexpected success in booking the Clara Kimball Young productions, and this is saying a great deal, as President Sol L. Lesser is never lacking in enthusiasm. The pictures have been placed in most of the large cities of the State, and exhibitors are eagerly awaiting the first release, the advertising matter for which is now at hand. This concern has decided to enter the Rocky Mountain field again, and has sent John McCormick to Denver to open an office. Irving Lesser, manager of the Los Angeles branch, was here a short time ago to talk over the policy that will be pursued in putting out the Clara Kimball Young pictures. He is making a good start in the southern city, and states that conditions there are quite promising.

The Pathe exchange is making preparations to remove from its present quarters on Turk street, having completed tentative arrangements for taking space in a fine building on Market street. Even if this deal does not materialize, the headquarters of the firm will be moved, as the lease on the present quarters expires within a few months and is not to be renewed. The San Francisco branch is now in charge of H. E. Lotz, a recent arrival from the East, but Harry W. Oviatt, who has been manager there for almost two years, is still here.

The Progressive Motion Picture Company is also feeling the business revival, and to care for the increased trade that has come its way of late has been compelled to take over more space in the Pacific Building, which has been its home for several years. District Manager Herman Wobber has returned from a trip of inspection through the Northwest, and is enthusiastic over the manner in which Paramount releases are being received there.

Although the Artcraft Pictures Corporation is the latest concern to enter the San Francisco film exchange field, it already has a volume of business booked that would be envied by many old-established film exchanges. Arthur S. Kane, the Pacific Coast representative, has been covering Southern California of late, but is expected back at division headquarters in San Francisco shortly. Offices have been taken over in the Pacific Building on Market street, and Local Manager C. M. Simmons has been very busy of late receiving applications for service.

One of the busiest places on Film Row at the present time is the George Kleine exchange, through which will be handled the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service releases. The office is being completely rearranged to care for the increased business that will be handled, and several additions are being made to the booking force. W. O. Edmonds, who has charge of the Coast offices, will make a trip to Seattle as soon as the local office is in shape again, and will move the exchange maintained there to new quarters, the present facilities being inadequate. The Billie Burke serial, "Gloria's Romance," is still going great in this territory and promises to be a good money-getter for exhibitors for some time. The last chapter is being shown at the Tivoli theatre this week, and the management of this house has expressed a wish that the serial had been longer.

Manager William Citron of the San Francisco branch of the William Fox Film Corporation, states that the local office has more business booked than ever before, both locally and in the country districts. "The popularity of Fox features is so apparent," he said, "that but few exhibitors handling them make a change in service. Most of the theatres now showing them are the ones which booked this service when it was first placed on the market. If any one wishes to see how they draw locally they have but to go to the Rialto theatre and see the crowds that come up this far on Market street to see them. The success of this house is the talk of the entire Pacific Coast, and proves that location lacks much of being the whole thing. The pictures shown play their part, a great one, in determining the success of a house."

A. Markowitz, who has just been placed in charge of the local Bluebird office, succeeding Charles Luntz, who has resigned, is very enthusiastic over the quality of the Bluebird releases. "These pictures are getting better all the time," he said, "and this fact is becoming recognized, as can be judged from the number of new houses that have used Bluebird films for their openings. Conspicuous among these was the new Royal theatre in this city, one of the finest houses that has been opened in many months."

The Western Film exchange, recently opened by Dan Markowitz at Golden Gate avenue and Leavenworth street, is marking time until the arrival of some feature productions from the East. Several good films have been purchased.

Looking Ahead With The Producers

Bessie Love and Louise Glaum Triangle Stars in the Two Releases for Week of October 29

BESSIE LOVE and Louise Glaum are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for October 29. Little Miss Love appears in "A Sister of Six," a Fine Arts production recently completed under the direction of the brothers C. M. and S. A. Franklin. Miss Glaum enacts the part of a secret service siren in the Ince production of Richard Harding Davis' thrilling war drama, "Somewhere in France," which Charles Giblyn has directed.

The scenes of "A Sister of Six" are divided between Old California, under the Mexican regime, and the seacoast of New England. Miss Love is shown as the head of a family of seven small pioneers, who have been left alone in the land of gorgeous sunsets and treacherous natives after the murder of their father at the hands of Don Francisco Garcia, who covets the American's ranch. The girl's vaquero lover sends the orphans to their miserly uncle in New England, who is the real owner of the ranch.

He does not give them a very warm reception, as his main interest in life is the gathering of shekels. Later, upon receiving a message from the loyal young vaquero, the New Englander hurries to California with his adopted family, where stirring events await them. The ranch is besieged by Garcia and his band, and by a ruse all of the faithful retainers are lured away, so that the children are left alone with the house servants to defend the place against its invaders. After a thrilling battle, help arrives in the nick of time, and the denouement brings retribution to the infamous Garcia and happiness to the little mother and her family.

One of the last stories from the pen of the late Richard Harding Davis, "Somewhere in France" contains all the elements of a big popular success, apart from the interest attaching to its authorship. Miss Glaum is given the opportunity to display her talents in a role calling for beauty of the most alluring type, coupled with the psychological enactment of character in which the love of intrigue and adventure are ruling passions. Herself the daughter of a German spy, she is found living in Paris prior to the outbreak of the war with a young French army captain, whom she robs of certain important plans relating to the defenses of Paris. These she sells to the Germans, fleeing to Berlin herself with the attaché, who arranges the deal.

The French captain she has ruined kills himself rather than face disgrace. His brother makes a vow to retrieve the family honor. Upon the outbreak of the war, the beautiful spy is found traveling in northern France in the wake of the German army. She is accompanied by a mysterious coadjutor, who acts as a wireless operator, handling the various code messages that she sends from time to time and also taking the part of her chauffeur. A series of exciting events take place when they are overtaken by the French army in a deserted chateau. The woman poses as the Countess d'Aurillac, and everything seems working out to her satisfaction, when suddenly things take an unexpected turn. The wireless operator is discovered and brought before the French general, who, instead of ordering his death, rewards him with a medal of honor. The supposed German spy is really the brother of the young French captain who had killed himself, and has been himself employed in the service of France. The beautiful adventuress is taken to Paris under the escort of a French officer—the real Count d'Aurillac—and lodged in the Prison of St. Lazare, instead of the Grand Hotel, as she had hoped. Howard Hickman, in the role of the mysterious wireless operator, shares stellar honors with Miss Glaum.

Glimpses of Two New Essanay Releases—On the Left, Arthur Bates and Edward Arnold in "Marooned," and Next to It a Flash from the Geo. Ade Comedy Fable, "Kittenish Superanns"

EINAR LINDEN RE-ENGAGED BY FOX

Einar Linden, the Danish actor, who scored such a pronounced success as Don Jose in William Fox's picturization of "Carmen," has been re-engaged for a prominent part in a photoplay soon to be released.

Mr. Linden, who also had roles in "The Eternal Sapho" and "The Family Stain," has been on the boards since the age of seven. He has been successively a grand opera tenor, clown, dancer, stage manager, librettist, composer and an actor, both in the spoken and in the silent drama. He speaks seven languages, and has appeared in support of Bernhardt, Duse, Monet and Sully.

When he was seven, he was attracted by a wandering group of Lapland players, and Young Linden left with them, unknown to his parents. When the police finally located him, he was standing on a barrelhead in the street singing to a crowd of 2,000.

HARRY BENHAM TO APPEAR OPPOSITE JUNE CAPRICE

Harry Benham has been selected by William Fox to play opposite June Caprice in the latter's fourth photoplay, on which work has begun last week. Mr. Benham is especially well adapted for his new lead. For the last year he has been with Universal, and from 1910-1915, he was with Thanhouser.

Harry Hilliard, whose place the new Fox actor takes, is cast for the chief male part in a forthcoming release. Preceding his entry into the silent drama, Mr. Benham had a long stage career, particularly in musical comedy. "Madam Sherry," "Woodland," "Sultan of Sulu," "Pinafore," "Wang" and "Florodora" are among the plays in which he appeared.

Mr. Benham was born in Valparaiso, Indiana, thirty years ago, but his parents soon removed to Chicago. As a boy he worked particularly hard, because he wanted enough money to train himself to become an opera singer.

MULTIPLICITY OF GOWNS FOR VALESKA SURATT

Valeska Suratt, who already holds all records for costumes in a single film—established in "The Soul of Broadway," her first Fox photoplay—will add several more to the number in her new picture. The gowns will be among the most gorgeous creations ever presented to a movie audience.

To appreciate what this means, one must recall that in "The Soul of Broadway," Miss Suratt wore more than thirty different costumes, stunning in design and color effects.

Ensemble of Striking Scenes from Fox's Multiple Reel Production, "Romeo and Juliet," Featuring Theda Bara

FOX ENGAGES A WHOLE TOWN

Last week, most of the Fox companies, in both the eastern and the western studios, were out on "locations," and the strips of films sent in show remarkable photography throughout.

Director Richard Stanton, screening the picture featuring Alan Hale and Gretchen Hartmann, found that he needed a town. The result is that everything except the human part of San Felice, New Mexico, is now the property of the Fox Film Corporation. The place will be used for raids. Then the remains will be destroyed by explosion and fire, while the cameras grind their hardest.

A HOUSE WITHIN A HOUSE FOR MOROSCO STUDIO

A complete bungalow is being erected on the Morosco studio stage under the big glass roof for a forthcoming Vivian Martin release on the Paramount Program. This will enable the experts who run the cameras at the Morosco studios to secure very unusual views and "shots" of consecutive rooms not otherwise obtainable, and several novelties in motion photography are expected. Miss Martin's new photoplay will carry her all the way across the continent to arrive in this bungalow.

FOX STARTS FOUR NEW PRODUCTIONS

One photoplay was completed last week by Fox, and four more pictures will be under way this week. The finished screen drama is that starring George Walsh. Juanita Hansen plays a handsome waitress opposite Mr. Walsh. The new screen dramas placed in work are those of June Caprice, Virginia Pearson, Valeska Suratt, and Director Apfel's tenth production.

Essanay-Chaplin Revue of 1916 Ready for Release October 21, Through General Film Company Service

THE date for release of the Essanay-Chaplin Revue of 1916, has been fixed for October 21, through General Film Service. The Revue is in five acts. Bookings can now be made.

While the revue has been compiled from the three great Essanay-Chaplin comedy successes, "The Tramp," "His New Job" and "A Night Out," President George K. Spoor of Essanay, wishes it understood that it is by no means a case of cutting three two-reel pictures into five reels and running one after the other.

The Essanay-Chaplin Revue of 1916 tells a complete story, dove-tailing without a break throughout its length, the whole making one of the most unique comedy features ever offered. Edna Purviance, Ben Turpin and Leo White appear in the revue in support of Chaplin.

The story opens with Charlie Chaplin as "The Tramp." He is out of work and leaves the city to wander along the country highways. He rescues a girl from a gang of hoboes, who are trying to rob her, and is given work on her father's farm. After a series of adventures on the farm, which is an entirely unfamiliar place to this city bred tramp, he is shot while routing some burglars. The girl nurses him back to health, and he falls in love with her. When he has recovered, the girl's sweetheart returns and he realizes that she is not for him.

Heartbroken, he leaves a note for her, and wends his way back to the city, where he hunts work. He gets a job as a motion picture actor, and then begins a series of adventures of a day before the camera that will send spectators into gales of laughter over "His New Job."

After a day of arduous toil, Chaplin goes out with one of the other studio employes, Ben Turpin, for a night's frolic. The net of misadventures he weaves about himself and his companion would turn the sourest misanthrope into a sunny-tempered optimist. Chaplin finally is plunged into a bathtub of ice-cold water by an irate husband.

A GREAT BIG PISTOL FOR MARGUERITE CLAYTON

In "The Heart of Virginia Keep," a three-act Essanay drama, Marguerite Clayton in the disguise of a messenger boy, engages in a pistol duel in the slum district of a large city. It marked the first time since she appeared in western pictures, that she was called upon to handle a pistol. So she brought to the studio a big Colt single-action "forty-five," which had been sent her three or four years ago by an admiring cowboy. Blank cartridges for this powerful weapon were obtained, and it was utilized by the star in the gun-fighting scenes.

MOROSCO SUBJECT IS A FAMILY AFFAIR

Talent, like other "afflictions" seems to run in families, judging from Kathlyn Williams' new Morosco photoplay. In this film a father and son, a mother and daughter are all appearing in the same subject.

There is Herbert Standing, the silver haired actor of note, who thwarts the evil work of Wyndham Standing, his son, the "heavy" who is a new acquisition to the Morosco studios. In addition to this father and son combine, Helen Jerome Eddy plays the daughter to her own mother, Mrs. F. Eddy.

PARAMOUNT ANNOUNCES EIGHTEEN FEATURES FOR OCTOBER AND NOVEMBER RELEASE

THE Paramount Pictures Corporation announces eighteen forthcoming releases that will be issued by it during October and November, in which its leading stars appear.

The list includes: Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Mae Murray, Marie Doro, Blanche Sweet, Lenore Ulrich, Vivian Martin, Fannie Ward, Marguerite Courtot, Ann Pennington, Louise Huff, Anita King, Myrtle Stedman, Cleo Ridgely, Owen Moore, Jack Pickford, Thomas Meighan, Sessue Hayakawa, Dustin Farnum, Wallace Reid, and others.

Plans were laid two years ago by each of the producing companies for efficient photo-dramatic and scenario departments, and they have steadily grown so that the list of writers, authors and dramatists who are now contributing to Paramount Pictures include the greatest writers of the age. Particular attention has been paid to the type of story that is accepted, and with the producing companies offering from $1,000 to $1,500 for a single idea, it is natural that they are receiving the best that is obtainable on the market.

The forthcoming releases announced are: October 2, Lasky, "The Lash," Marie Doro; October 5, Lasky, "The Storm," Blanche Sweet; October 9, Pallas, "The Intrigue," Lenore Ulrich; October 12, Morosco, "Her Father's Son," Vivian Martin; October 16, Lasky, "Witchcraft," Fannie Ward; October 19, Famous Players, "The Kiss," Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot; October 23, Famous Players, "The Rainbow Princess," Ann Pennington; October 26, Famous Players, "Seventeen," Louise Huff and Jack Pickford; October 30, Famous Players, "Miss George Washington," Marguerite Clark; November 2, Lasky, "The Heir to the Hoorah," Meighan and King; November 6, Lasky, "The Soul of Kuri San," Hayakawa and Stedman; November 9, Pallas, "A Son of Erin," Dustin Farnum; November 13, Lasky, "Unprotected," Blanche Sweet; November 16, Lasky, "The Years of the Locust," Fannie Ward; November 20, Famous Players, "The Heir Apparent," Mae Murray; November 23, Lasky, "The Yellow Pawn," Ridgely and Reid; November 27, Famous Players, "Charlotte Corday," Pauline Frederick; November 30, Famous Players, "Martyrdom of Philip Strong," All Star Cast.

These announcements come simultaneously with the establishment of exhibitors' aid departments in each of the Paramount exchanges and the contest that is being waged for approximately $10,000 in prizes for the most efficient exchange, the latter being based principally on efficient co-operation rendered the exhibitors. With each of these forthcoming productions special exhibitors aids will be distributed and the exchanges will render their clientele every assistance.

During the same two months, there will be released by Paramount ten additional editions of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, ten Paramount-Bray Cartoons, ten Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures and five Paramount comedies. These "little features" are booked regularly through its various exchanges.

The editors of the Paramount Pictographs have formulted important plans for these two months, and each release of the magazine-on-the-screen will have four leading subjects, all of which themselves would make a single reel picture. The editors have cut each of the features to approximately 250 feet, so that in putting four little features together in a single reel release, they have a single reeler.

At the Bray studios where the Paramount cartoons are manufactured, additions are being made for the staff of writers and cartoonists.

Burton Holmes, the world's greatest traveler, who conducts the weekly trips-around-the-world for Paramount, has arranged a particularly interesting series of ten trips for these two months, beginning with "A Scotch-Irish Reel," after which some intimate glimpses will be given, "In Old Ireland." From thence there will be a jump taken to the "Southern Italy" climate and from there the travelers go to "The Island of Capri." The trip also leads to "In Classic Greece" and "In Modern Athens." In the latter pictures are shown the Olympian Games in Athens and a Marathon Day in Greece. After these visits are made to "Modern Egypt" and "The Real Streets of Cairo" and "Round About the Pyramids."

SURGERY TAUGHT BY MOTION PICTURES

For the first time motion pictures have been applied as an aid to the most difficult operations in surgery. Last Monday Dr. S. William Schapira, member of the Academy of Medicine, lectured at Fordham University on various Genito-Urinary operations, and illustrated his lecture with motion pictures of actual operationes performed by him. These pictures, which possess an extraordinary scientific value, cover thirteen distinct operations, and were made by a Pathe cameraman, under Dr. Schapira's direction. In the past surgical lectures have been illustrated by "still" pictures or drawings and much of the detail has been lost. In these motion pictures every movement is clearly shown and it is not too much to say that a new era has dawned in the teaching of surgery.

INCREASED NUMBER OF PRINTS FOR MUTUAL WEEKLY

The strong position enjoyed by the Gaumont single-reel releases is reflected in the increasing number of prints ordered from week to week by the Mutual Film Corporation, through which these popular pictures reach exhibitors. The Gaumont Company now offers a diversified program in its three single-reels which are prepared with the sole idea of providing entertainment of a character to contrast with the photodrama which may be shown at the same time by the exhibitor.

The Mutual Weekly, the oldest of the three Gaumont single-reels, gives the news of the world, "Reel Life" gives pictures that correspond to what one finds in a good magazine, and "See America First" and the animated cartoon provide both entertaining views of our own land and American humor.

INTERNATIONAL SCORES ANOTHER BEAT

The International scored another beat for the Hearst News Pictorial last Saturday with the Astor Cup Race pictures. The race was decided at five o'clock and four hours later, at nine o'clock, the film was shown in a number of New York theatres. The pictures were greeted with enthusiastic applause. The International is particularly proud of the achievement, following its beats on the arrival of the Deutschland at Baltimore and Bremen and the New Jersey explosion.

Edith Storey Leaves for Trip Across Continent

Popular Vitagraph Star, Accompanied by Her Mother, Gets Rousing Send Off at Grand Central Station

WHAT promises to be one of the most successful tours ever taken by a photoplay star was inaugurated on Monday evening October 2, when Miss Edith Storey bade her friends farewell in the Grand Central Station, New York.

Miss Storey and her mother, who accompanies her on this trip, were given a rousing send-off by a big delegation if Vitagraph favorites, V-L-S-E salesmen and exhibitors. Seated in the cab of the electric locomotive, with her hand on the throttle, she was photographed with a group around her, consisting of Earle Williams, Antonio Moreno, Alice Joyce, Harry Morey, Eulalie Jensen, Charles Kent, Mary Maurice, Rose Tapley, Adele Kelly, Director Van Dyke Brooke, Brinsley Shaw, Director Wm. P. S. Earle, Templer Saxe, Robert Gaillard and A. Victor Smith, representing President A. E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton, who were not able to be present.

Miss Storey's itinerary calls for two days in Chicago, two in St. Louis, two in Kansas City, a day in Dallas and two days in San Antonio. Upon her arrival in Los Angeles, upon the 12th of October she will appear in the leading photoplay houses in conjunction with some of her features such as "The Tarantula," "The Shop Girl," "The Two-Edged Sword," "The Christian," etc.

At the time this is written no announcement has been made of the production that will be put on with Miss Storey in the leading role at Vitagraph's Western studio in Hollywood. It is probable that she will be under the direction of William Wolbert.

In all, it is estimated, that Miss Storey will appear personally in fifty theatres before she arrives in Los Angeles. Miss Storey's last picture made on the Coast for Vitagraph was "Captain Alvarez," and this triumphful return to California is expected to be productive of a super feature.

A big campaign of publicity has been undertaken by the V-L-S-E managers in Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Dallas and San Antonio and all co-operating they will do much to popularize this already famous Greater Vitagraph girl.

"THE COUNTRY THAT GOD FORGOT" POPULAR

All reports received in the offices of the Selig Polyscope Company are to the effect that the Selig Red Seal Play, "The Country That God Forgot," is proving unusually popular and that exhibitors in all sections of the country are taking an interest in the drama and arranging bookings.

The Cleveland Plain-Dealer states that "The Country That God Forgot" has never been surpassed in western drama. Reports from Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service exchanges received at the Selig offices, Chicago, are all in accord as to the prospect of the Selig play scoring a tremendous success.

In many cities "The Country That God Forgot" has been booked for from three days to a week's run, so great is its popularity.

License of Boston Theatre Suspended After Showing of "Is Any Girl Safe?"

THE license of the Majestic theatre was recently suspended after Boston's Censorship Commission, consisting of the Police Commissioner, Stephen O'Meara, Chief Justice Winfred Bolster and Mayor James M. Curley, had witnessed the matinee exhibition of the film play, "Is Any Girl Safe."

The previous day Mayor Curley had announced that no censoring of this film or any other Boston performance would be performed by the commission unless formal complaint was filed. Last week he was informed that a complaint was about to be filed by Secretary Charles T. Daly of the Catholic Federation.

Boston's censorship law, enacted as a result of "The Birth of a Nation" agitation, was so worded as to prohibit elimination of parts, requiring instead either approval of the performance as a whole or suspension of the license.

Lester Davis, manager of the Master Producer's Photoplay Company, owners of the film, said last night:

"When I learned that Mayor Curley, through his board of censors, had ordered the film stopped I could hardly believe my ears, in view of the fact that moving pictures that were infinitely more objectionable in every respect had been shown in Boston during the last few weeks. Mr. Curley stopped the film without a hearing, following a telephone call that he see the film. The film has been passed by the National Board of Censors, which is not true of the other films which have been freely run here. The Mayor's act is an outrage."

Mayor Curley was last week interviewed by a committee of exhibitors and declared that it was his opinion that the ban on children under 16 would probably be lifted after the children had been in school a short time and no bad results followed. In the meantime about half the cities in Massachusetts have placed the ban on picture houses and exchange men report that business is suffering to some extent.

Manager Patten of the General reports that the new fall and winter program starts October 2.

Manager Brown, of the Allston theater, has booked the Selig-Tribune news series.

The Kalem two-reel series is booking strong in New England as is "Grant, the Police Reporter" to be released October 2.

The Boston theatre is showing the Mary Miles Minter series. Manager Harris, of the Boston, says he wishes he could get a Minter picture once a week instead of once in every four.

Charlie Chaplin made his bow in his fourth first run theatre in Lawrence last week. It is "The Movie," recently opened, and their program is exclusively Mutual.

The New Elm theatre at Portland is using all Mutual Pictures, also, Minter, Holmes, Russel, Star, etc.

The Owl theatre, Lowell, has come back to Mutual service after a lapse during the summer.

The Bowdoin Square, Olympia, is now running pictures, after having devoted itself to Yiddish drama for two years. They are using Mutual special service.

PECULIAR MIX UP OVER CANADIAN THEATRE

A peculiar situation has arisen with regard to the Royal Victoria theatre in Victoria, B. C., which was brought to light when the Victoria Opera House Company, builders of the theatre, succeeded in having set aside a judgment for $2,000, obtained some time ago by the Adamson-Moffat Heating Company in default proceedings for the balance due on the contract covering the installation of the heating and ventilating plants for the theatre.

It has been discovered that one of the associate architects had given a final certificate to Simon Leiser, the president of the Opera House Company, somewhat over a year ago. Counsel claimed that this certificate had not been handed over to his clients.

It is now disclosed that as the owners of two of the lots on which the house stands have foreclosed, the ownership of the building is divided, the foreclosers holding the front of the house, and the major part of the auditorium, while the Victoria Opera House Company owns the stage and the back door.

The Dominion Theatre Company, which is operating the house with Fox and Pathe pictures, under a lease entered into some months ago, continues in possession.

SAN FRANCISCO PRECEDENT APPLAUDED

The abolition of the Board of Censorship at San Francisco, has had a profound effect in California cities, where the censorship of moving pictures is still permitted by law, and exhibitors in several of these places are making inquiries as to the steps to be taken to rid their cities of this yoke upon the business. Congratulations are being showered upon the Film Exchange Board of Trade and the Exhibitors' League for the part these organizations took in the local fight, these coming from all parts of the country. Plans are being quietly discussed for a fight against censorship at Sacramento, where pictures are said to be censored without a screen inspection, and where exhibitors up to the present time have been unable to get their cases before the courts. The victory at San Francisco has been far reaching in its effects and is expected to do more than anything else to assist in abolishing censorship in the smaller cities of the state.

ABSURD CENSOR RULINGS IN OHIO

"Cut out scene where woman murders man with dagger," reads the order of the Cleevland censors. This is in spite of the fact that no scene of the movie shows a woman murdering a man. What is shown is an actress going through such a scene on the stage. The movie is a story of the stage called "Diane of the Follies."

"Saint, Devil and Woman" is a play about a labor strike. The censors, as usual, refuse to permit a picture that suggests that corporation managers ever use violence in strikes, or incite violence. All scenes showing riots are ordered cut out. Also they ordered out a sub-title which reads, "If the strikers enter our property, shoot to kill. It will teach them a lesson."

The censors continue to bar pictures showing a man and a girl at a table touching shoes playfully, or otherwise. They appear to consider it immoral; this in spite of the fact that it has been a favorite subject for such artists as Charles Dana Gibson. The latest order of this sort by the censors is in a comedy called "The Surgeon's Revenge."

BATHING SUITS BARRED BY OHIO CENSORS

Recent mandates received by the Selig Company from the Ohio Board of Movie Censors, signify that the Buckeye authorities on what one should and should not see are keeping up the usual pace. It will be remembered that this Board barred "The Birth of a Nation" from Ohio to please the voters of Wilberforce. This wonderful film has been exhibited in every other state in the Union and in almost every civilized country. Then the Ohio Censors ordered a picture of Villa cut from the Selig news weekly because "he was a bandit". And now, the august censors have ordered cut outs from the Selig news weekly of girls attired in bathing suits. It might be stated that these maidens wore bathing suits which have been approved by the bathing suit censors of Chicago and elsewhere.

RAYMOND McKEE AGAIN WITH METRO

Raymond McKee has been engaged as Mabel Taliaferro's leading man for her next two Metro-Rolfe five-act feature photoplays. The first of these will be "The Sunbeam," by Shannon Fife, adapted by June Mathis. In "The Sunbeam" Mr. McKee plays the part of Danny, the youthful sweetheart of Prue, played by the star. The following play is as yet unnamed.

Raymond McKee played juveniles and light comedy parts for four years with Lubin, later going to Edison. His first stage experience was gained in a play called "Grit the Newsboy," in which he had the leading part. He played Young Parmalee with Robert Hilliard in "A Fool There Was," and appeared in a number of musical comedies, notably "The Golden Girl," under the management of Mort H. Singer. He played in stock in Chicago and Atlanta. He was born in Chicago in 1892.

"BABBLING BESS" IN SEE AMERICA FIRST

One of the greatest successes ever achieved by Harry Palmer was his humorous creation of "Babbling Bess." Now that he is animating Gaumont's Kartoon Komics, Mr. Palmer has brought the little girl who has made millions laugh into the motion picture field. "Babbling Bess" first appeared in the New York World. Her "trademark" was always her final remark, "I didn't do nothing, but I won't do it again."

"Babbling Bess" will make her motion picture bow upon the reel with "See America First," No. 57 released October 11. Mr. Palmer has prepared a scenario showing her at her worst—which is always at her best.

Spoor Has Pictures Ready for New Service

Five Features Completed and Ready for Release Through K-E-S-E Commencing October 16

PRESIDENT GEORGE K. SPOOR, of Essanay, has scheduled release dates for five forthcoming features to be offered through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. These will be the first group of Essanay plays to be put out through this agency.

"The Return of Eve" is scheduled for October 16. This play is in five reels and features Edna Mayo, suported by Eugene O'Brien. It is built on the theme of a boy and girl raised in the wilderness and suddenly plunged into civilization. Arthur Berthelet directed the play.

On November 6 "The Prince of Graustark" will be released. This is a sequel to George Barr McCutcheon's "Graustark," both of which were among the best selling novels ever written. Essanay produced "Graustark" and experienced record business with it. It is believed to be a certainty that the new feature will surpass even the great popularity of "Graustark." Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton appear in the leading roles, with Ernest Maupain and Sydney Ainsworth heading the support. Fred E. Wright directed this feature.

"The Chaperon," taken from Maxine Elliott's stage hit, will be offered in five acts on November 20. It features Edna Mayo, supported by Eugene O'Brien, and is being directed by Arthur Berthelet, a producer of note.

"The Breaker," Arthur Stringer's story which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, is now being constructed in five acts by Director Wright, with Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig. Ernest Maupain is the heavy lead. This will be offered on December 18.

Henry B. Walthall's superfeature, "The Truant Soul," will be released on December 25. This is taken from Victory Rousseau's story and exteriors are now being filmed in the hill country of Wisconsin. Mary Charleson is playing in support of Mr. Walthall and Harry Beaumont is directing the production.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG K. C. EXCHANGE STARTED

The Midway Photoplay Corporation, another name for the Clara Kimball Young Corporation, has established an exchange at Kansas City, with W. H. Bell of Chicago as manager, covering territory embraced in the states of Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas. The new exchange will handle the Clara Kimball Young pictures exclusively.

The Supreme Feature Service Company has established an exchange at Kansas City, Mo., with Martie Williams, late with the Universal Company, as manager, Harry F. Grelle as general manager. The new exchange will handle the film picture "Where are my Children?"

PEARSON TO BEGIN SIXTH PHOTOPLAY

Virginia Pearson will soon begin another photodrama with a vitally interesting story. The production will mark her sixth for the William Fox Films.

A NEW VITAGRAPH STAR IS BORN

Katherine Lewis has been selected by President Albert E. Smith of the Greater Vitagraph to play an important role in a forthcoming James Oliver Curwood story directed by Marguerite Bertsch.

Miss Lewis is young, petite and talented and has great hopes of becoming a favorite overnight through her association with the distinguished Earle Williams.

For the past year, Miss Lewis has taken numerous small parts, each one a trifle more important than the preceding one and has rapidly acquired the technique of the screen.

In keeping with its policy of encouraging young women, who are called upon for minor parts in its productions, the Greater Vitagraph organization feels that Katharine Lewis has won her spurs and this new part with Mr. Williams is a recognition of her services and budding talent.

This announcement will serve to correct one made recently to the effect that Naomi Childers would play opposite Earle Williams in this production. Billie Billings also will portray one of the principal roles in Mr. Curwood's story.

ACTORS GIVE ORPHANS TWO BALES

Harold Lockwood and May Allison, the Metro-Yorke stars, at the present time absorbed in their respective screen characterizations in "Big Tremaine" by Marie Van Vorst, proved to be of a charitable disposition, when they presented a Los Angeles Orphan Asylum with two large bales of cotton. It was while Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison were working in the Imperial Valley, California, for scenes in "Big Tremaine" that the inspiration for this charitable act came to them. The two bales of cotton were picked by members of the "Big Tremaine" cast, and brought to Los Angeles in Mr. Lockwood's new automobile.

All the cotton for California is raised in the Imperial Valley, and some beautiful shots of the fields in bloom were secured by Cameraman Tony Gaudio, under the direction of Henry Otto. "Big Tremaine" is laid in Virginia, which explains why Director Henry Otto and his company journeyed in quest of cotton fields.

Charlotte Walker Has Historic Parts in "Sloth"

Appears as Margaret Brent, Sally Wells, and Molly Pitcher, Three Famous Women of Early Colonial Days—Picture Has Modern Setting, but Uses Past to Drive Home Lesson

CHARLOTTE WALKER has just completed "Sloth" for McClure Pictures. Miss Walker does not appear in either the first reel or the fifth reel of this five-reel film, but when she does appear, she portrays three historic characters. The second reel shows her depicting Margaret Brent, the beautiful, passionate, high-bred girl, who became Lord Baltimore's official representative in the early settlement days of Maryland, and whose advocacy of the vote won for her the title "First Feminist of America."

In the third reel Miss Walker assumes the role of Sally Wells, a little sixteen-year-old maid of an Old Dutch settlement on Staten Island, who braved the perils of the wilderness practically alone, to build a home on her father's grant of land far up on the Hudson River.

The fourth reel shows the star in the part of Molly Pitcher, the dearest hoyden in American history, who followed her husband into the thick of Revolutionary warfare, and turned the tide of victory toward the Continental Army in the battle of Monmouth.

Notwithstanding these historic scenes, "Sloth" has a modern setting. A young girl is asked by her soldier-lover to choose between her life of luxurious indolence, and a life in which pioneer courage is required. Miss Walker steps from the past in her quaint characters to influence the girl to choose the heroic way by showing her the heritage of bravery and devotion to country that has come down to inspire American women of today.

"Sloth" emphasizes the dangers of indolence in our national life; the peril of permitting luxury to usurp the place of the simplicity of our forefathers. The introduction of this theme connects the series Seven Deadly Sins, with the national side of life in a vivid and stirring way that will charm the beholder.

First Showing of "A Daughter of the Gods"

Initial View of Mammoth Fox Production Scheduled for October 17, at the Lyric Theatre—Picture Fourteen Months in the Making

AFTER three months' labor expended in titling and assembling the picture and arranging and timing the elaborate musical score, "A Daughter of the Gods," the million-dollar production of William Fox in which Annette Kellermann is featured, will be presented for the first time on Tuesday, October 17, at the Lyric theatre. Mr. Fox has decided definitely on this date.

By the time of the first performance the picture will have been fourteen months in the making. It employed greater numbers of people than had ever before been assembled for picture-taking. The scale of expenditure was staggering, and the results were so remarkable that the mere rumor of them has caused extraordinary public curiosity. Although twenty times as much film was taken as is usable in an evening's entertainment, nevertheless the scenes showing each of the sensational feats of Miss Kellermann have been retained. "A Daughter of the Gods," it is said, will offer the quadruple themes of Greek myth, Oriental romance, marine adventure and land battle, but developed in a strongly unified story instead of in parallel streams of action. It will thus add a further contribution to the bewilderingly new technique of the motion picture.

SHERRILL PHOTOGRAPHED WITH PRESIDENT WILSON

William L. Sherrill, president of The Frohman Amusement Corporation, was the other half of a protracted conversation, which occurred before the camera when President Wilson was visited by the film magnates at Shadow Lawn, last week. The picture will be featured in several news weeklies next week.

NEW AND UNUSUAL ENDING IN SELIG PLAY

"While all the reviewers complimented 'The Country That God Forgot' our latest Red Seal Play, yet none of them mentioned a detail that, to my mind, is very important," said William N. Selig in the course of a recent interview. "It was the unusual ending," he continued. The unusual ending is a detail much to be desired in film plays. One can number on the fingers of a hand the picture-plays that end unusually. It seems almost impossible to get away from triteness to a more or less degree. There is the hand clasp, the embrace, the lover's caress and so on, all utilized time and again.

"The unusual ending is worthy of especial mention where ever encountered. In 'The Country That God Forgot,' there is not only an unsuspected ending, but the very novelty of it is startling. It is an ending that also leaves something to the imagination. You know what has happened, you are impressed by what has happened, and yet that occurrence, vital as it is to all the characters concerned, is not presented on the screen. It is suggestion purely and simply. One of the unusual touches certain to be emulated by others. To my mind the ending of 'The Country That God Forgot' opens entirely new possibilities in motion picture art. It is something, both new and novel."

LAST EPISODE OF "TIMOTHY DOBBS"

The last episode of the "Timothy Dobbs—That's Me" series featuring Carter De Haven will be released on the Universal program for the week of October 16. The two-reel episode is entitled, "Fame at Last," and was produced by Wallace Beery from the story by Bess Meredyth. Robert Milash, Ivor McFadden and Margaret Whistler appear in support of De Haven.

The tenth episode of "Libery," the new Universal serial, also will be released during the week of October 16. It is entitled "The Human Target," and was written and directed by Jacques Jaccard. Marie Walcamp appears in the leading role, supported by Maud Emory, G. Raymond Nye, Eddie Polo, Jack Holt, Neal Hart, Bertram Grassby and L. M. Wells.

The Red Feather release of the week is "Barriers of Society," a five-reel society drama, featuring Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson. The story of the play by Clarke Irvine was scenarioized by Fred Myton, and was produced by Lloyd B. Carleton. Richard Morris, Alfred Allen, Miss Witting and Mr. Montague appear in support of the principals. It will be released on October 16. On the same day Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean appear in "His Own Nemesis," a Nestor comedy, written by W. R. Newman, and produced by L. W. Chaudet.

On October 17 William V. Mong and Peggy Coudray play the leading roles in "The Wrath of Cactus Moore," a Gold Seal three-reel Western drama. There will be no Victor release in the week of October 16.

"Through Baby's Voice," a delightful Laemmle two-reel domestic society drama, featuring Douglas Gerrard, Edna Maison and Zoe Rae, will be released on October 18. The scenario of this play was written by Calder Johnstone, and was produced by George Cochrane. On the same day the L-Ko comedy, "Safety First," will be released in one reel, with Dan Russell, Gertrude Selby and Billie Ritchie providing the fun. "Safety First" will be followed by No. 42 of the Universal Animated Weekly.

On October 19 a single-reel subject, entitled "The Decay," featuring William Garwood and Lois Wilson, will be released. There will be no releases under the Powers brand on this date. The Special Big U release on this date will be a two-reeler, entitled "Tigers of the Plains," an animal drama featuring William Clifford.

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard will be starred on October 20 in "The Elusive Enemy," an Imp drama, done in the slashing Ford-Cunard style. A single-reel Rex drama will be released on this date, entitled "The Gold Band," featuring Hal Cooley and Helen Leslie. There will be no Nestor release on October 20.

October 21 will see the release of "The Conspiracy," a Bison two-reel railroad drama, featuring Harry Carey and Edith Johnson, which was written by William Parker, and produced by Henry McRae. The principals are supported by E. N. Wallack and L. C. Shumway. On the same date "Beans and Bullets," a Joker comedy, scenarioized by Harry Wulze from the story by Barney Fury, and produced by W. W. Beaudine, will be released.

The following are the titles of the Specials for the week of October 9: Special Rex, "The Unfinished Case," one-reel drama, featuring Bob Leonard. Special Big U, "A Pair of Shadows," one-reel comedy, featuring Fritzi Brunnatt; Special Laemmle, "Stolen Honors," one-reel drama, featuring Mary Fuller; Special Imp, "The Elusive Enemy," one-reel drama, featuring Francis Ford and Grace Cunard; Special Victor, "Room Rent and Romance," comedy, featuring Victor Potel.

The special one-reel Victor comedy will be entitled, "The Five Thousand-Dollar Dream."

Brenon Has "War Brides" Nearly Completed

First Nazimova Picture Ready for Release Through Selznick-Pictures Soon—Brenon Will Produce Louis Joseph Vance's "The Lone Wolf" Next

WITHIN a few weeks Herbert Brenon's "War Brides," with Nazimova as the star, will be completed and will be shown at a Broadway theatre.

To complete "War Brides" in the length of time in which it has been done was a heroic task, and for the last three months Herbert Brenon has barely taken time for sleep. There is no detail of his productions which he does not personally supervise. Each evening he works out the scenes, which are to be photographed the following day until they are firmly fixed in his mind.

In addition to this, he has innumerable business details to discuss with Lewis J. Selznick, who controls the distribution of his output, and a mass of other important matters to handle.

Brenon will not take a vacation, when he has completed "War Brides." Already he has secured the world rights for a photodrama, which he will create from Louis Joseph Vance's successful novel, "The Lone Wolf." The demand for the book can be deduced from the fact, that when Mr. Brenon decided to use it for his next production, he tried to buy several copies, and was able to locate but one in all the book stores in New York.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

By LONGACRE

AS sure as the sun will shine once or twice during the coming year, biographies will arrive at this office intended for Motion Picture Studio Directory too late for current publication. Maverick Terrell's is the first. The following account of Mr. Terrell by himself arrived too late for publication in the Studio Directory which is now out and enjoying record breaking consumption (adv.). But the account is too good to escape print.

By the way Mr. Terrell has this to say of the Directory: "Late or not late I again commend the public spirit back of your Studio Directory. You have done a good service to this new profession—more power to you." (Adv.)

Now for the terrellizing of Terrell:

Maverick Terrell, Staff Author, one of Charlie Chaplin's hired funny men:

Maverick Terrell as written up by Maverick Terrell is admittedly quite the best of intensely interesting reading matter.

Mr. Terrell was born in Indianapolis, we will say, about forty years ago, and the place has been literary to an extreme ever since. At the tender age of two, Mr. Terrell took his collective parents by the hand and exit suddenly for San Antonio, Texas, for no other purpose than to move on. In those days it was cheaper.

San Antonio, Texas, stood for Maverick Terrell for twelve years, which is indeed some stood —for Mr. Terrell; never mind San Antonio. Then Mr. Terrell's male parent became United States Minister to Belgium, which has much to do with Maverick Terrell's vivid personality. At that young Terrell did get to Europe with his paw and stayed over just long enough to never forget to mention the fact.

He brought back with him most of the culture of effete Europe and a love for the theatre which has obsessed him ever since—the love, not the culture. Mr. Terrell's pater then sent his first born to De Pauw University.

Then Mr. Terrell went back to cultured Europe for a year as a newspaper correspondent. Then Maverick Terrell, being unusual, came West and discovered Seattle. Maverick Terrell has written things in his literary chop sueyism, many things, some fairly bad, some indifferent, some rotten, but the funniest was "Shanghaied," a comedy in film form. Perhaps the fact that Charlie Chaplin appeared in it had something to do with this. Mr. Terrell is co-author of the playlets, "The Real 'Q,'" "The Woman in the Park," and "Detectivism," that appeared in Smart Set magazine and the vaudeville theatres. He is author of "The Other Fellow," "This Is the Life," and "Temperament," some more Smart Set and stage stuff, and co-author with Rachael Marshall of the plays, "Friday the Thirteenth" and "The Cave Lady."

Maverick Terrell was a newspaper writer for several years in other cities than New York, but why mention the fact? Mr. Terrell has money, but that is another risk of mention, and fact. Maverick Terrell in appearance is muchly in evidence, outside of which he is the normal paid humorist. He is a light bay, with gentle disposition, and stands well without hitching.

The Screen Club has moved again. The new building has more floors, more bar room, more class and more everything. A farewell was given to the old home on the last day in September. The bar license ran out at twelve o'clock that night, but they say everyone present bought in advance until three in the morning, thus creeping around the craft of License Commissioner Bell. By the way, the new building is 117 East 45th Street.

H. H. Buxbaum, branch manager in New York City for General Film Company, is a firm believer in preparedness. Even at this date, when he has no inclination of giving up his position, he is preparing the way for his successor in the person of Harry F. Buxbaum, the youngster whose picture is presented in this issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Mr. Buxbaum says that Harry F. has some original ideas with regard to motion pictures that some day he hopes to see come true. Father Buxbaum is known throughout the United States wherever there is a film exchange, having been connected with General Film Service for many years.

Little Madge Evans, of the William A. Brady forces, has become so popular that her services are sought after by all companies. Robert Vignola of Famous Players who is now putting on "Seventeen" from Booth Tarkington's novel, needed her for an important juvenile role in the production and nothing would do until he had succeeded in borrowing the diminutive lady from Mr. Brady.

George D. Proctor, the original conductor of this column and Harvey F. Thew, his successor, are both in Los Angeles at the present writing, New York having been to hot for them after a short time at the conducting job. So the boss wished it on us (for safety's sake we will not divulge our name), and we strongly suspect some ulterior motive behind this action, although never to our recollection have we done anything to cause the boss to desire a whole continent between us.

At that there may be something in the fact that both George and Harvey are working for Lasky.

All the News That Fits, We Print — Longacre Square, N. Y., October 7, 1916

EDITORIAL

It is with regret that we announce the temporary or perhaps permanent decease of the Bayside Bugle. Bayside, however, is something of a summer colony and owing to the insistent demand of subscribers who have moved to the metropolis for the winter months, the Bayside printing plant along with the entire staff has been transplanted to Broadway. A number of additions have been made in the personnel of the editorial and subscription departments, in order to take care of the increased business.

The policy of the Longacre Lampoon will be identical to that of the defunct Bugle in some respects and much broader in others. All the news that registers in the area between the World's Tower and the Godfrey building will be reported in these columns. Correspondence is invited.

KEEN CARTOONS READY THIS MONTH

In preparing its forthcoming releases of pen comedies, the Keen Cartoon Corporation of 729 Seventh avenue, has borne in mind one small rule of procedure, and the film already completed vindicates its conviction. This one small rule that has been selected as the pole star of the corporation is, that comedy film must get the laughs.

The process of producing the film to conform to this requirement is now worked out so that the progress of an idea from the scenario department through the editorial department, is a much easier step than the step from the editorial department to the director of production, for each scenario must pass a jury of experienced critics. After all is said and done, it is the ideas which cause the merriment.

The Director of Production passes the idea to one of the well-known cartoonists on his staff. This cartoonist is left free and unhampered, and the animation editor has to struggle with the problems of bringing the drawings to life. The first five releases are nearing completion and will be ready for trade showing early in October.

PRESIDENT WILSON COMPLIMENTS INCE ON "CIVILIZATION"

"Civilization," Thomas H. Ince's spectacle has received the endorsement of President Wilson. Recently the President, having heard so much about the picture, invited Mr. Ince to his home at Shadow Lawn, N. J., where he complimented him on his work, and asked many questions relative to the production end of the motion picture business.

Mr. Ince, who had intended leaving for California, the day previous to the appointment, prolonged his stay that he might see the President. He describes his reception at Shadow Lawn as extremely cordial. "I found Mr. Wilson courtesy and affability personified. A more cordial reception," he said, "I could not possibly have had."

J. Parker Read, Jr., Mr. Ince's business representative accompanied the producer to Shadow Lawn. A number of still pictures were taken of the President, Mr. Ince and Mr. Read.

AUTHOR OF "BIG TREMAINE" TO WED

A wedding of international interest will take place late this month in Paris, when Marie Van Vorst, the celebrated writer, author of "Big Tremaine," the book which has been picturized for the use of Harold Lockwood and May Allison, the Metro-Yorke stars, will be married to Signor Gaetano Cagiati, of Rome, Italy. By a strange coincidence, the Metro's version of Miss Van Vorst's novel will be released at almost the same time. The production is now being made at the studio of the Yorke Film Corporation at Hollywood, Cal., under the direction of Henry Otto.

The bride is the daughter of the late Hooper C. Van Vorst, a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The ceremony will be performed by the Archbishop Monsignor Ballifol, and the witnesses will be Frederick B. Van Vorst of New York and Mme. Robert Le Roux, the bride's sister-in-law, formerly Mrs. John Van Vorst, also a well-known writer.

WINNERS OF CONTEST GET TRYOUTS

Two charming belles from Pittsburgh, winners of the contest conducted by the Pittsburgh Press, arrived at Vitagraph studios last week for try-outs as picture players. They were Miss Florence Curry and Miss Rowena Rossiter. When the Pittsburgh Press produces its motion picture play "Man and Millionaire," Misses Curry and Rossiter will head the cast.

After a day at the studios meeting some of the famous Vitagraph stars, the girls were properly made up and several tests of them were taken. This film will be forwarded to Pittsburgh and shown in one of the local theatres under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Press.

"GRIP OF EVIL" DRAWING TO A CLOSE

The fourteenth episode of Pathe's "The Grip of Evil" is released October 15. In it the final answer is given to the question which John Burton, first laborer, then multimillionaire, and hero of the picture, has asked throughout the episodes.

The parts of Jackie Saunders, one of the stars, included a shallow young heiress who betrays the confidence of a labor leader, an instructress in a dancing academy, a political boss's stenographer, a department store clerk who goes wrong, a farmer's daughter who goes to the city and is lost in the "melting pot," a factory worker, a fisher girl and a young society woman who gives up her butterfly existence to devote her time to the poor.

ROSENBLUH BUYS NEW YORK AND NORTHERN NEW JERSEY RIGHTS TO "MY COUNTRY FIRST"

Louis Rosenbluh, the president of the Variety Films Corporation, announces that he has acquired the right for New York and New Jersey of the new Tom Terriss feature film, "My Country First," which deals with the timely topics of patriotism and preparedness.

Mr. Terriss enacts the star role in this photoplay, which is in six parts, and is supported by a company, including Jill Woodward, in a vampire role, and Helene Ziegfield.

The plot of "My Country First" concerns itself with the thrilling adventures of a young inventor, who plans to give to the United States his secret formula for a powerful explosive. A band of international spies contrives a plot to filch from him the secret of the explosive. How they are foiled in their attempts, after numerous sensational adventures, forms the substance of the plot.

The Committee of Preparedness Bazaar, which is to be held in the Grand Central Palace, New York City, from December 14 to the 21st, under the auspices of the American Patriots and Relief Society, is making arrangements for this picture to be shown at the bazaar. It is also expected that the prize poster, which is desired by the committee, will be used in connection with "My Country First," and students and high school pupils will also be invited to view this photoplay.

Among those to whom invitations will be issued to view the private showing of "My Country First," are Sterling P. Story, director of the Women's National Committee, American Defense Society; Major William H. Elliott, adjutant-general of the Junior American Guard; Mrs. William Cummings Story, president Daughters of the American Revolution; Mrs. Elphinstone Maitland, honorary secretary of the Blue Grass Fund; Mrs. Lee R. Boardman, president of the American Women's League for Self Defense; George H. Masten, and Arthur D. V. Storey.

Pathe's "The Light That Failed" Booked Heavily

First Public Showing at Historic Boston Theatre at Request of Rudyard Kipling—Long Runs the Rule

THE first Kipling work to be put into pictures, Pathe's "The Light That Failed," has been accorded an unusual honor by the famous 4000-seat Boston theatre of Boston, Mass. This theatre is owned by the Keiths, and on its historic stage nearly all of the world's greatest artists have appeared. General Manager Larsen and Theatre Manager Harris have just signed with Manager Farrell of Pathe's Boston office for a solid week's run of this Gold Rooster play at one of the highest rental prices ever paid for a feature.

By special request of both Mr. Keith and Mr. Kipling the first public American showing of this picture is to be held at this famous theatre.

"The Light That Failed" is being booked very heavily by every one of the various Pathe exchanges. Long runs are the rule. The fame of Mr. Kipling, the splendid reputation of Robert Edeson, the success which has followed the various productions of Edward Jose, have all contributed to the unusual amount of business being done on "The Light That Failed."

Mr. Edeson is such a big drawing card both on the stage and on the screen that a brief account of his career will be of interest. He was born in New Orleans and educated in Brooklyn. When eighteen years old he got into things theatrical by becoming box office clerk of the old Park theatre in Brooklyn. On a wager he took the part of an actor who suddenly became ill and made his stage debut in "Fascination." He first starred in the dramatization of Richard Harding Davis' "Soldiers of Fortune" at the Savoy theatre, New York.

"The story of Kipling's novel has been deviated from only enough to meet the requirements of the screen. Essential incidents have been retained and in many instances intensified by the acting of the principal players in the film drama."

INTERNATIONAL ENLARGES NEW YORK OFFICES

The international in order to concentrate its offices, has leased and furnished the entire fifteenth floor of the Godfrey Building at 729 Seventh avenue and on Saturday, removed the departments that have been located on the eighth floor to the fifteenth. The executive offices will continue on the sixteenth floor.

Increasing business has necessitated enlarging the animated cartoon department which will be located on the fifteenth floor, as will the New York exchange and the business department.

On this floor the International has constructed one of the largest and most beautiful projection rooms in the country. It will seat approximately fifty persons and is furnished in the Adam style.

The sixteenth floor will, as heretofore, house the executives. On this floor there will be another large projection room, which will be devoted wholly to the use of the executives. By the new arrangement, the International now has one of the largest and most complete offices in the city.

STORIES OF NEW KALEM SERIES SYNDICATED

Arrangements have been completed by the Kalem Company through which the stories of the new series, "Grant, Police Reporter," featuring George Larkin and Ollie Kirby, will appear in over a hundred of the principal newspapers of the country. The one-reel plots of Robert Welles Ritchie have been fictionized for this purpose by the well-known magazine writer, Redfield Ingalls.

The class of papers found on the "Grant" list is indicated by the presence of such names as the Pittsburgh Leader, the Boston Record, the Salt Lake Herald-Republican, the Winnipeg Tribune, Houston Post, etc.

In addition plans have been prepared to aid exhibitors in cities where newspapers have not yet been signed up to secure this valuable publicity by co-operation with their local editors. The newspaper publicity in connection with an extended line of advertising aids gives the "Grant" series unusually elaborate backing for a one-reel series.

Universal Makes Its Own Models

Big Business Greets Release of New Pathe Serial

"The Shielding Shadow" Passes All Records—"Pearl of the Army," Next Serial, Postponed Indefinitely

THE big business reported by every one of Pathe's thirty exchanges in advance of the release of "The Shielding Shadow," increased beyond all expectations during the first week of the release.

At the request of a majority of the branch managers, who have booked "The Shielding Shadow" for longer runs at better theatres than any other serial has enjoyed, it has been decided by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, to postpone indefinitely the release of "Pearl of the Army."

Most of the advance bookings on "The Shielding Shadow" were for the first run showing in large theatres in the metropolitan cities. Exhibitors in the smaller cities, remembering how they profited by the advertising of the first run houses on "The Iron Claw," eagerly awaited an opportunity to book the first showing in their communities. These bookings have swelled the total business on "The Shielding Shadow" to record figures. Already nine of the exchanges have wired for extra prints and reorders have been placed for all advertising matter.

"The big business we are doing on this serial is particularly gratifying to me," says Mr. Berst, "because it shows that exhibitors want quality pictures and are willing to pay for them.

"Many exhibitors are showing both "The Grip of Evil" and "The Shielding Shadow." Others have followed the lead of the Boston Theatre and have booked "The Shielding Shadow" for a full week's showing. It was for these reasons that a majority of our branches requested a postponement of "Pearl of the Army."

MILDRED CONSIDINE ENGAGED BY MONMOUTH

Packard.

JAMES RIVER VIEWS IN GAUMONT

Gaumont's "See America First" No. 58 takes the spectators for a trip on historic James River in Virginia. It is therefore rich in historic spots, and the more important of these have been caught by a Gaumont cameraman. On the same reel is a humorous contribution by Harry Palmer, portrayer of Gaumont Kartoon Komics and director of Gaumont shadowgraphs. The reel is released October 18.

The third single-reel is the Mutual Weekly. No program of this release can be announced in advance, since it is not assembled until the day before it is issued, to insure subscribers get the latest news possible on the screen.

Universal Lose in Fight with British Navy

H. H. Van Loan Tries to Bring Submarine from Nassau and Is Held Up in Mid-Ocean by British Cruisers

H. H. VAN LOAN, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, returned to New York on October 2, after some exciting adventures with British cruisers in the Bahama Islands, British West Indies. Mr. Van Loan left New York very secretly on September 7, intending to bring the submarine, which plays such a prominent part in the Universal submarine spectacle, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," back to New York, or, failing in that, to Miami, Fla.

Van Loan spent three weeks putting the submarine in shape, fitting on a new metal periscope and conning tower and wireless aerials, and then cleared from Nassau. Fifty miles out, near Abaco Island, however, five cruisers bore down on the yacht Ranger, which was towing the Universal submarine, Nautilus.

A shot across the yacht's bows brought it to a stop at once. A pinnace put out from the Berwick, one of the cruisers and an officer boarded the Ranger.

He left the yacht and boarded the Nautilus, the Universal's submarine. After he had spent some time in the innards of the craft, he emerged and ordered the captain of the Ranger to tow the Nautilus back to Nassau.

Van Loan was warned at Nassau that if he attempted to move the submarine from her pier he would be thrown into prison. The harbor authorities especially were vindictive, because Van Loan had cleared the Nautilus without their cognizance. When Van Loan got his clearance papers the harbor authorities assumed that the Nautilus he had reference to was a local high-speed motor boat, and when they learned that he had taken the Universal submarine of the same name out to sea they said some uncomplimentary things about him.

On his return Van Loan was arraigned before many British officials, including Governor William Allardyce, the attorney general, and the Colonial secretary. The American Consul, William Doty, plead in vain for him and his submarine, but the only concession the British authorities granted was the release of Mr. Van Loan's person. This was granted with a forcible hint that he had better take the Monterey of the Ward Line back to New York.

Owing to the fact that Mr. Van Loan had no passport, his difficulties were still further increased. Governor Allardyce accused the Universal press agent with being a German agent.

Through Consul Doty he lodged a complaint with the American State Department. The Universal lawyers, Stanchfield and Levy, will press the case from New York. The Universal is determined to back Van Loan up in his attempt to secure the release of its property.

MAY ALLISON IMITATES JOAN D'ARC

In a manner similar to Joan D'Arc, who led the armies of France to victory, May Allison in "Big Tremaine," the Metro-Yorke production leads a thousand men through the streets of a Virginia town. The picturization of Marie Van Vorst's novel describes an episode in which Isobel, the part Miss Allison portrays, leads an enthusiastic political delegation to the home of her sweetheart, where the latter delivers a brilliant speech. He is a candidate for Congress and Miss Allison rides through the town and solicits votes on behalf of her lover.

OLD STAGE CELEBRITY IN METRO PICTURE

With Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the new Metro-Quality production, "In the Diplomatic Service," is Mrs. Gilbertie Learock, member of a celebrated old theatrical family. Her husband's brother was the late George Learock, leading man for Thomas Keene, Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barret, Madame Rhea, and other famous stage celebraties, and director of Forepaugh's stock company in Philadelphia.

Mrs. Learock was before her marriage Gilbertie Davidson, daughter of John X. Davidson, manager of the old Davidson Opera House, St. Paul. Following the family bent, Mrs. Learock went on the stage, first appearing with "Little Corinne," when Corinne was little.

For three years she played the mannish woman, Nera Mann, with Ward and Vokes in "A Run on the Bank." In "The Female Drummer," with Johnstone Bennett, she played the star part under Miss Bennett's name on several occasions, when the latter was ill. Not long afterward she retired from the stage, but returned to public life when motion pictures, of which she is very fond, came into vogue. For Metro she has appeared in "Dimples," for Selig in "A Milk White Flag" with Otis Harlan, and for the advance in "The Making of John Hayes."

NEW SERIES OF COMEDIES FOR FRANK DANIELS

General satisfaction is felt by all of the Vitagraph V-L-S-E managers over the announcement just dispatched from the home office that Frank Daniels has returned from his long vacation eager to work before the camera in some rapid-fire Vitagraph comedies. These comedies, it is said, are constructed along entirely new lines, more or less built to order for Mr. Daniels, whose appearance on the stage or screen is always the signal for a spontaneous outbreak of laughter.

Frank Loomis, Vitagraph casting manager, is now engaging a capable supporting company for Mr. Daniels including a feminine lead the announcement of whose name in the near future should cause smiles of satisfaction to appear on the faces of the exhibitors, who will get first runs of all Vitagraph-Daniels comedies.

Fifth Episode of "The Yellow Menace" Called "The Haunted House," Replete with Action and Excitement

THE title of the fifth episode of "The Yellow Menace," released this week by the Unity Sales Corporation, is called "The Haunted House." In this episode the Government authorities become increasingly alarmed over the activities of Ali Singh and his agents. Senator Stevens of Oregon shares the fate of Senator Johnson and his death is the result of treachery of "The Yellow Menace."

Najla, after being temporarily safe from Ali Singh's clutches, has taken up her residence with Margaret Bronson and May Manning, and the efforts of Errol Manning and Bronson are directed toward keeping the three girls protected and away from danger. In spite of all precautions, however, they are told that Errol Manning and Willard Bronson are being kept in a house some distance away and need their assistance. Fooled by this trick, the girls rush to this house; are captured and held as hostages with a threat of torture if they do not swear obedience to Ali Singh's commands.

Manning and Bronson alarmed at this fresh attack on the girls set about to rescue them, but their horror at the plight of the hapless girls is nothing compared with the consternation caused by a cable from London, announcing that Willard Bronson's father, the banker, has been murdered in London, whither he had gone on important business. Willard Bronson realizes that Ail Singh has carried out his threat.

METRO MAKES A BABY CRY

James Sheridan, aged eight months, has been engaged for the part of David-as-an-infant, in the picturization of Margaret Deland's novel, "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie," with Ethel Barrymore as the star.

Like everyone else, James at once fell a victim to Miss Barrymore's charms. David-as-an-infant is supposed to cry vociferously, and as many babies do cry when away from home, Director John W. Noble supposed there would be no difficulty as to that detail. But he reckoned without Miss Barrymore's way with babies.

The star, who is in private life Mrs. Russell Colt, is prouder of being a mother than of all the stage triumphs she has ever achieved. Somehow James Sheridan, aged eight months, just knew it instinctively. He began gurgling and looking contented as soon as he saw her, and when she lifted him from the crib, which was his cue to cry, he gurgled and laughed some more. He simply would not cry.

Finally Director Noble had an inspiration. Motioning Miss Barrymore to stay out of sight for a moment, he sent a rough-looking scene-shifter to the crib. The baby burst into loud wails, screwing his little face up in such a way as to register tearfulness properly. Miss Barrymore picked him up, and the picture was made before he had finished his weeping. Then the star insisted on petting and loving James herself, to make him happy again before restoring him to his waiting mother. James is going to be mighty proud of this when he is a little older.

THIRD "SHIELDING SHADOW" EPISODE SET FOR RELEASE ON OCTOBER 15

The third episode of "The Shielding Shadow," Pathe's serial produced by Astra, will be released on October 15. It is entitled "The Mystic Defender."

The story is characterized by the actions of Ravengar, the man of mystery, who attempts to secure proof of a forgery committed by "One Lamp" Louie which caused Jerry Carson's imprisonment and death.

The feature of the release is a cabaret fire scene. In the fire, Sebastian basely deserts his wife Leontine, but she is rescued by Ravengar. Later, her husband forgetful of his compact to treat her as a wife in name only, takes her in his arms and kisses her. She repulses him and by strategy gets him out of the room. She locks the door, and angered by this he strives to batter it down with a heavy chair.

As the door begins to give way, Sebastian is surprised to see at the height of a man's head two burning eyes and close beneath them, two white hands, one which clutches a dagger. Frightened at this, he rushes off. Leontine, surprised, slowly opens the door and sees the hall empty. She looks at her feet and there is a dagger.

Kalem Releases Include First Issue of "Grant, the Police Reporter"; Numerous Comedies as Well

KALEM'S releases for the week of October 16 bring the first "Ham Comedy" in which Henry Murdoch, heretofore featured comedian with Sis Hopkins and Ivy Close appears. This release, "A Symphony in Saurkraut" presents the new all-star comedy quartette of Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch. The story finds Ham and Bud the working force in a factory, making the commodity mentioned in the title. It is released Tuesday October 17.

This week also includes the issue of the first episode of the new "Grant, Police Reporter" series. This is "The Code Letter," which, as announced in last week's NEWS, will be ready at General Film exchanges on Friday, October 20.

First-run bookings already arranged for at the various exchanges indicate that the first episode of the new one-reel series will make the week a record one for Kalem. In addition to George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby, others in the cast of "The Code Letter," are Robert Ellis, William McKey and Arthur Albertson. Among the thrilling scenes shown are those in which Larkin climbs hand over hand on a pipe stretched twenty feet between two twelve-story buildings, a perilous trip along a six-inch ledge from one window to the other of a skyscraper, and the climax shown in the illustration here.

"The Yellow Hand" is the episode of "The Girl from 'Frisco" series scheduled for this week.

Marin Sais and True Boardman are featured in this two-reeler issued on Wednesday, October 18.

The "Hazard of Helen" release for the week is known by the working title, "A Fight With Death." Billy Boy, the Kalem youngster, has a prominent part in this picture, the climax of which shows Helen rescuing the child from a runaway car by a daring feat. P. S. Pembroke, G. A. Williams and George Routh are others in the case of this one-reeler, issued October 21.

AMERICAN AMBULANCE PICTURES GOING WELL

"Our American Boys in the European War," the four-reel picture showing the activities of the American air and ambulance men on the battle front, which the Triangle Film corporation is marketing on a special basis is being booked heavily. Recently several of the boys shown in the picture have been killed while discharging their duties and others have been decorated for heroism. The demand for the picture is growing each week as many people are only beginning to take a keen interest in the activities of the American heroes.

FIRST TWEEDLEDUM RELEASE OCTOBER 9

The title of the first "Tweeledum" release, set for the week of October 9th, is called "Torpedoed by Cupid," a one-reeler, which offers "Tweedledum" a full opportunity to display his powers. Playing the role of a country sweetheart who sees his best girls made love to by two intruding rivals, Tweedledum proceeds to play all manner of tricks upon them and his sweetheart's parents, which is not a very safe thing to do as the story shows. After climbing a few trees in an automobile, in their wild efforts to elope, Tweedledum and the girls finally take refuge on an outgoing ship, which the fond parents and the disappointed rivals blow up. The lovers, however, are impervious to all such discomforts and drift into shore, wrapped in each other's arms and sitting on a non-sinkable box. Tweedledum is supported by Babette, his wife, known as "Tweedledee," Louise Carver, in character parts, Tom Murray, Rex Adams and Billy Slade.

HENRY OTTO BOTH ACTOR AND DIRECTOR

In addition to preparing the screen adaptation and directing "Big Tremaine," Henry Otto is playing an acting part, which is small, but yet important to the story. It is through his persistency as a money lender, that David is led to steal money from Big Tremaine's money bag, which makes possible the entire story.

Before assuming the duties of a director, Henry Otto was considered a good villain. This was while he was with the Selig Company. He played the heavy roles in a num- of Harold Lockwood's Selig pictures, and was later promoted to the producing ranks.

Before entering the portals of filmland, the Metro-Yorke director was indentified with the speaking stage for nine years. He studied for the priesthood in St. Bernard College in Cullman, Alabama, but gave up his studies to take up a course on the stage. For two seasons he played with Richard Mansfield, was in the original company that produced "The Devil," and appeared in vaudeville with Minnie Seligman in "The Drums of Doom."

October 16 Is Date Set by Lasky for Its Prize Play

"Witchcraft" Is from Pen of a Physician, Who, Though Not a Professional Scenario Writer, Prepared Script Which Won Award in Contest

ONE of the unusual features about the Lasky production, "Witchcraft," which will be released on the Paramount Program on October 16 with its captivating Fannie Ward in the stellar role, is the fact that this is the photodrama which won the prize contest held at Columbia University under the auspices of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company.

The author of this intense and unusual drama is Dr. R. Ralston Reed, a physician of Morriston, N. J., and one of the members of the new class in photodramatic at Columbia. Dr. Reed is not a professional writer of scenarios, but his story was held by the judges to be the best example of photodramatic technique among the scores of plays submitted.

Professor V. O. Freeburg at Columbia started the class last winter and the cooperation of the Lasky Company was offered in conducting a contest for the best photoplay written during the initial year of the class. William C. De Mille, the celebrated Lasky director, also a Columbia alumnus, who has been actively identified with the picture production, acted as the principal judge and read all the manuscripts submitted.

In addition to receiving a substantial sum for the photodrama, Dr. Reed was given a trip to the Lasky studio at Hollywood, at the expense of the company, where he met Fannie Ward, the charming star, and also saw the play in the process of making.

The story concerns Suzette and her mother, Huguenot refugees, who take up their residences in one of the New England colonies in 1692 during the frightful witchcraft reign of terror. The mother falls ill and Suzette enlists the services of Nokomis, an Indian, to assist her. Nokomis is considered a witch and Suzette's mother's delirium strengthens the suspicion.

Suzette meets Richard Wayne, ward of the town minister, Makepeace Struble. He accompanies her to her home and is seen by old Struble, who is very angry, as he desires the girl for himself. Struble sends Wayne out of the village ostensibly to join the Governor's staff, but in reality to get him out of the way that he may marry Suzette. He succeeds in convincing Suzette that the only way she can save her mother from persecution as a witch is to marry him. Just after the wedding ceremony, Suzette's mother dies. Nokomis gives the girl a talisman telling her it will make her every wish come true.

Upon his return Captain Wayne is thunderstruck that Struble has married Suzette and decides to go away.

Struble is brutal to his young wife, and with the talisman in her hand, she tells him he were better dead. Shortly afterwards Struble is taken ill. Suzette learns from Nokomis that the Indians are planning a mutiny and hurries to obtain the assistance of Captain Wayne. In the meantime the old man dies accusing Suzette of having cursed him, and when Suzette returns she is found guilty of witchcraft and sentenced to be hanged. Wayne and his men save the colony and he succeeds in reaching the Governor, who arrives in time to save the innocent girl, and puts an end once and for all to the folly of witchcraft.

STRONG IS A GRADUATE FROM THE SPEAKING STAGE

Eugene Strong, who is cast as Robert Clayton, the artist, in the sixteen episode super-serial, "The Crimson Stain Mystery," by Consolidated Film Corporation, was for six years in stock in the West, and then appeared for two years in the leading role of "The Virginian."

He appeared in the Paul Armstrong sketch, "To Save One Girl," on a forty weeks' vaudeville tour, supporting Catherine Calvert, Mr. Armstrong's wife. His first big success in motion pictures was as the juvenile in "The Man Inside," in which he supported Edwin Stevens.

Olga Olonova is cast for a Russian Vampire in "The Crimson Stain."

FRANK LOSEE RENEWS CONTRACT WITH FAMOUS PLAYERS COMPANY

This is the open season for renewal of contracts with the Famous Players Film Company. With Pauline Frederick and Marguerite Clark successively placing their signatures on the dotted lines set apart for that purpose, there is now a third line bearing the well known signature of Frank Losee. Mr. Losee who is one of the best known character actors on the motion picture screen and has an enviable stage record as a basis of his celluloid achievement, will continue on the Paramount Program in Famous Players productions.

During the long period that he has been associated with that company he has appeared in support of nearly all its well known stars and has himself been featured in two photoplays, the adaptation of Denman Thompson's "Old Homestead" and "The Evil Thereof," an original story.

In support of Mary Pickford, Mr. Losee played the wealthy banker in "Hulda from Holland." He was an important figure in "Diplomacy," in which Marie Doro starred and was the profligate husband in "The Masqueraders," starring Hazel Dawn. He will also be remembered for his clever work as Taylor, the Customs Inspector in the Famous Players adaptation of "Under Cover," in which Miss Dawn co-starred with Owen Moore.

Mr. Losee is now at work in "Miss George Washington," the first production in which Marguerite Clark will star under her new contract.

HONEYMOONERS HAVE PARTS IN SAME PICTURE

Nance O'Neil and her husband, Alfred Hickman, have started work in "Greed," the third play of the forthcoming McClure series of the seven deadly sins.

This distinguished actress's marriage to Mr. Hickman is of very recent date, and the engagement of both husband and wife in the same picture affords them an opportunity to extend their romance into their working hours. To be in the supporting cast of the girl of his choice is not a new experience for Mr. Hickman. New York theatregoers will remember that when Miss O'Neill appeared in Belasco's "The Lily" Mr. Hickman was in her company.

Nance O'Neil's part in "Greed" is that of a young woman innocently involved in the operations of a speculator, whose passion for money and power leads him into the shadiest recesses of high finance. The girl's endeavors to free herself from this stock operator's machinations, and to save others from being ruined by him, form the basis for an absorbing play.

"THE SHINE GIRL" IS TAKEN UP BY WOMEN'S CLUBS

"The Shine Girl," the Pathe Gold Rooster play, produced by Thanhouser, has been taken up by the Women's clubs everywhere. In San Antonio, Texas, according to The Light, of that city, the Women's Club there arranged for a private showing of the picture, and after seeing it the members told the reporter that "The Shine Girl" was "the cleanest, sweetest picture" they had ever seen, and declared that there should be more pictures of the sort to "bring sunshine into people's lives."

World Pictures Ready Seven Months in Advance

All Releases Up to May 29 Completed and Waiting on the Shelves—Stabilizing Effect of Policy on World Product

UNDER the direction of William A. Brady the World Film Corporation continues the policy of completing its output far in advance, and now finds itself in a position to announce all of its releases up to and including May 29, more than seven months ahead.

There are several points of unusual interest and significance about this situation in addition to the main feature, which is that no other such feat has ever been accomplished in the motion picture business, so that the present performance sets a record which seems quite likely to stand for some time to come.

The completion of a large number of photoplays in this manner will naturally have the effect of stabilizing the World product, acting as an assurance to exhibitors and the public that the pictures are not hurriedly made in order to connect with an imminent release date, and that by the time they are due for delivery there will have been ample opportunity for the polishing process wherever needed.

Another and still more potential angle of this accumulation of picture plays, which seems to have escaped general attention, is that the World Film Corporation is increasing its actual, substantial assets at a rapid and important rate. The mere possession of so many completed and paid for plays, for which there is a large and increasing market demand, is a matter of very considerable commercial interest pointing to singularly far-sighted sagacity of management.

The list of World-Brady pictures now complete and awaiting release is as follows:

October 16, Ethel Clayton and Holbrook Blinn in "The Hidden Scar;" October 23, Gail Kane in "The Scarlet Oath;" October 30, Lew Fields in "The Man Who Stood Still;" November 6, Robert Warwick and Gail Kane in "The Heart of a Hero;" November 13, Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell in "The New South;" November 20, Alice Brady in "Bought and Paid For;" November 27, Gail Kane in "The Men She Married;" December 4, Robert Warwick, supported by June Elvidge and Mollie King in "All Man;" December 11, Clara Kimball Young in "The Rise of Susan;" December 18, Marie Dressler in "Tillie's Day Off;" December 25, E. K. Lincoln and June Elvidge in "The World Against Him;" January 2, Alice Brady in "A Woman Alone;" January 9, Gail Kane and Carlyle Blackwell in "On Secret Service;" January 16, Robert Warwick, supported by Doris Kenyon in "A Movie Romance;" January 23, Gail Kane in "Her God;" January 30, Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell, in "The Wall Beyond;" February 6, Robert Warwick in "The Man Who Forgot;" February 13, Alice Brady in "The Girl and the Wager;" February 20, Marie Dressler, in "Tillie's Divorce Case;" February 27, Alice Brady in "Darkest Russia;" March 6, Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell in "Infatuation;" March 13, all star cast in "The Honor of the Waynes;" March 20, Robert Warwick, in "Lafitte, Pirate;" March 27, Marie Dressler in "Tillie's Love Affair;" April 3, Alice Brady in "The Madness of Helen;" April 10, Lew Fields in "The Castaway;" April 17, Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell in "The Evil Way;" April 24, all star cast in "Shall We Forgive Her?;" May 1, Alice Brady in "Sinners;" May 8, Marie Dressler in "Tillie's Elopement;" May 15, Robert Warwick, in "The Page Case;" May 22, Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell, in "Girls Astray," and on May 29 Alice Brady in "Fifi."

"Series Idea Means Cumulative Advertising"

"Which Is the Sort of Advertising that Spells Success," Says William Wright, of Kalem, in Outlining that Company's Plans for Winter Months

DISCUSSING Kalem's plans for the coming Winter season with a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative last week, William Wright, of that organization, placed particular emphasis on the fact that all the Kalem productions would continue to be of the series type.

"We use the word 'series'" declaredlMr. Wright, in explaining the Kalem policy. "But what we really mean is the production that enables the exhibitor to benefit by 'cumulative advertising.' The 'Ham Comedies' explain this point. While each one-reel release is entirely distinct and separate, they form a 'series' in the sense that an exhibitor may advertise them and gain the benefits week after week by the cumulative effect.

"Our other productions announced for the Winter are also of the series type. 'The Girl from 'Frisco,' will continue well into mid-Winter because of our recent decision to extend it to twenty-five episodes in response to many requests from exhibitors. 'The Hazards of Helen,' the longest running series on the market, will continue at its speedy pace.

"Kalem is not given greatly to the blaring of trumpets but I think we could do considerable bragging about a series that is now almost two years old. Not only is it the oldest series, but I don't know of any series that can even boast of running half as long. And what is even more important, its present popularity would indicate that the railroad series will run on for two years more with the end still far in the distance. more with the end still very far in the distance.

"Then, of course, there is our latest 'short length feature,' the 'Grant, Police Reporter,' series. This will be one of the most important releases on our Winter schedule. It took considerable courage to carry out in a one-reel series the elaborate plans we have made for 'Grant, Police Reporter,' but the advance bookings have fully justified our step. Exhibitors know the class of stories Robert Welles Ritchie writes through his 'Girl from 'Frisco;' they realize what it means to get two stars, George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby, in one-reel productions. The combination cannot be beaten."

"SHE LOVED A SAILOR"

(Keystone-Triangle—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MACK SENNETT in "She Loved a Sailor" nicely explodes the theory that there is nothing new under the sun. We thought so too until we were permitted to see this one. His ingenious production department has devised a mechanical contrivance whereby his players walk and run on the ocean's surface. All done by double exposure you say. That's what we thought about it too, but in no scene where this delightful pastime was in practice did we catch the dividing line of the two exposures. Your audience will be fooled completely.

The picture is a burlesque and hangs together very well. The other business pictured is of the usual hilarious Keystone sort. We only knew one of the cast by name and that was Harry McCoy and he's a scream. The others were all good too, particularly the inventor of the water walking shoes.

"A PRINCE IN A PAWNSHOP"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is Vitagraph's second picture starring Barney Bernard. One would naturally expect a comedy to display the talents of this excellent comedian, but "A Prince in a Pawn shop" has little comedy in it, and little of that falls to Mr. Bernard. True, he creates a character in the person of David Solomon, a harsh banker and generous pawn broker, that wins the sympathies, but of his real element he has none. But this is not the big fault of the production. The picture is padded and grossly so. In other respects it passes muster with average success. The padding, however, looms up in such large proportions that some of the merit of the picture is quite eclipsed.

Solomon leads a modern Robin Hood's existence. He extorts money from the rich whenever he can legally do so, and in his pawn shop allows more than the value of the pawned articles would warrant. Solomon's son marries a girl in secret, but deserts her owing to the false testimony of another. Six years roll away and Solomon in his wanderings on the east side meets the son of the woman, really his own grandchild. After he has learned all the truth, he effects a reunion between his son and the girl.

The story which was written by Marie de Sarlabous and Andre de Segurola, aside from being inadequate for five-reel use is open to a few minor criticisms. It is not made clear that Solomon's son and the girl are married until old Solomon himself finds the woman. This oversight of the authors makes a scene, where the husband denounces his wife, because of her supposed past relations with the other man fall rather flat. Again in the first reel the progress of the story is interrupted several times by subtitles in which Solomon airs his deprecatory views on organized charity. We are not combating the sincerity of the statements—only the fact that they are out of place.

Paul Scardon directed the picture from a scenario by Garfield Thompson. The camera work appears acceptable, save for the first reel, where there are innumerable spots in the film which give it the appearance of being old. In support of Mr. Bernard appear Edith Hunter, Garry McGarry, Charlotte Ives, Lester Bernard, Brinsley Shaw and little Bobby Connelly.

"THE OLD FOLKS AT HOME"

(Triangle-Fine Arts—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MORE important even than the presence of Sir Herbert Berbohm in the cast, and more important than the fact that "The Old Folks at Home" comes from the pen of Rupert Hughes is the fact that never for an instant can the observer hazard an ending for the picture until it arrives and lets the facts about itself be known. If you are unaware of a picture's ending you certainly are kept in suspense, particularly when the chances seem to you to be even that the windup will be unhappy. Perhaps, though, we were wrong in implying that the concealed ending was more important than Mr. Hughes, as he was responsible for it.

Aside from this fact, which must assuredly be taken into consideration, the picture is unusually pleasing. The cast, from Sir Herbert down to various of the minor players and up to various of the more principal players, is exceptional. Sir Herbert has done what other Shakespearean and costume players have found it difficult to do when allotted a modern part in a motion picture. He has acted for the part. His scenes are not full of slow gesticulations, studied movements and impressive parades. In "The Old Folks at Home" Sir Herbert is a wealthy old farmer-senator, and he plays the part for what it is worth, no more, no less.

The scenario and direction both come from Chester Withey, who, to our mind, of all Griffith's staff of directors comes nearest to absorbing his master's ideas. The touches that Mr. Withey has put in both ends of his work on this feature are praiseworthy, and many times do they compensate for a scarcity of material with which to fill out the five reels. The farm scenes that Mr. Withey has procured are typically realistic in every instance and do more toward making the atmosphere convincing than a million word pictures could do.

The most of the plot is quite well known, telling, as it does, of the farmer boy who, after his father's election to the state senate, forgets all about his country sweetheart in his pursuit of pleasure in the city. His companions are anything but highly moral, and for one of them, a woman, he kills another, a man. His old father does the best he can to shield him, but the case goes to court, and until the last moment seems hopelessly against the boy. However, the mother turns the tide by her passionate appeal to the jury to save her son from prison. Altogether improbable and outrageous and legally wrong, says Mr. Hughes, or words to that effect, but his plea is that the old folks at home should receive some consideration.

Elmer Clifton really has the star role as the son, and his acting is quite excellent. Josephine Crowell as the mother does some wonderful work in her big scene. Mildred Harris blossoms forth in her first altogether grownup role as the country girl. Lucille Younge is the adventuress, while others are W. E. Lawrence, Alfred Paget, William Higby and Spottiswoode Aitken.

"THE POWER OF EVIL"

(B. S. Moss—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE Power of Evil," made for Mr. Moss by the Horkheimer brothers, is quite typical of their product in some respects. The popular appeal that the Horkheimers manage to instill in all their releases is present in "The Power of Evil," and while the picture as a whole was not made for audiences of discrimination, the trade need not be told how well the Balboa product goes with the average motion picture audience.

The picture is a society drama by George Bronson-Howard, and while it has a marked tendency to go to extremes, never striking a happy medium, it is otherwise consistently constructed and contains a wealth of strong dramatic situations. The production is effective, a realistic motion picture atmosphere having been obtained in all the phases of the picture.

A society man marries after promising to give up drink. The girl is a light-headed society butterfly who cares little for home life in her pursuit of pleasure. Without much ado she leaves her husband for a long house party. In the meantime the husband runs down and injures a girl who is trying to go straight, and taking her to his home, he nurses her back to health.

The wife returns and seeing the girl, takes the opportunity to get a separation. Then the young fellow goes back to drink, but the girl of the auto accident reforms him again. The two of them join the Salvation Army. On a slumming party his divorced wife meets him and tries to win him back, but he prefers to stay with the woman who has regenerated him.

The leads are ably taken care of by Henry King, Marguerite Nichols and William West.

"A CORNER IN COLLEENS"

(Triangle-Ince—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A PLEASANT little Irish comedy, featuring Bessie Barriscale and Charles Ray, is "A Corner in Colleens," which held the screen at the Rialto theatre, New York, during the week of September 24. There is nothing that is highly sustaining about the production, and there are times when one is inclined to wish that the producers had provided a little more of a story and a little less of Miss Barriscale, but there is a lot of humor scattered over the five reels, which did not go unwasted on the Rialto audience.

"A Corner in Colleens" is a picture that one can thoroughly enjoy or thoroughly dislike. Some people are not very fond of Irish dialect, others seem to revel in it, still others possess such thick skulls that the joke set forth in the dialect is liable to go amiss. We believe, however, that there will be enough laughs forthcoming from any audience to warrant this picture a warm reception. And the laughs, when they are not caused by Miss Barriscale, are evoked by the subtitles.

Shamrock is one of four orphans under the care of a widow who lives in a small Irish town. She is very much of a tomboy, and when the American who owns the widow's land comes to Ireland, Shammie takes an immediate dislike to him, for he purposes to turn the widow and her charges out of their home. The American, however, is a susceptible fellow, and soon falls in love with Shammie. And she, of course, falls in love with him. But it takes his arrest and imprisonment to make her confess it, and with his release the romance ends happily.

Miss Barriscale and Mr. Ray are supported by Margery Wilson, Roy Neill, Aggie Herring, Walter Perry, Alice Taaffe, Alice Lawrence and Charles French.

"THE CODE LETTER"

(Kalem-General Film—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY THEODORE OSBORN ELTONHEAD

"THE Code Letter" inaugurates a new series of modern, high-class pictures, that is being put out by the Kalem Company from the pen of Robert Wells Ritchie, called "Grant, Police Reporter." If the following episodes measure up to the excellent quality of the first picture, this series will form a worthy rival to the popular and successful "Hazards of Helen."

The first picture is thrilling in the extreme, containing three large, healthy, man-sized thrills, and they have been filmed in such a manner that it is easy to see that they are real incidents and not something evolved by the chicanery of the camera and the director. Tommy Grant, a police reporter, is barred from securing his news at police headquarters owing to the roast which his paper has given the chief of police. Thrown on his own resources, he is enabled by the exercise of what is known in newspaper offices as common ordinary reportorial intelligence, to bring a gang of thieves to book and recover their large quantity of plunder.

In order to do this he goes through three distinctly hazardous escapades, one crawling along the ledge of a skyscraper several stories from the ground, another going hand over hand on a piece of gas pipe stretched between two buildings high up in the air, and the third, which is one of the most real sure-to-goodness thrills that we have ever seen, is when he has the rope of a painter's scaffold and swings down the whole side of a building.

Tony Larkin is the dare-devil acrobat who causes one's hair to stand on end in this picture, and besides being a dare-devil acrobat he is also pleasing as an actor. Ollie Kirkby handles the leading feminine role in a pleasing manner, and the balance of the cast is made up of Robert Ellis, who is also the director; Arthur Albertson, William McKey, and G. Chira. The lighting and photography were well up to standard.

"THE LASH"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE Lash" is a mediocre picture as features in general go and a poor one considering it bears the Lasky trade mark. Not even the superb photographic work and many gorgeous seascapes, showing waves breaking on a rocky coast can counterbalance the shortcomings of the story. For it is the story that is the real stumbling block. It hinges on the situation in which the unsophisticated girl marries the sophisticated man. She thinks him unfaithful owing to the machinations of his former love and she returns to her island home in sorrow. In the fisher village where she lives it is the custom to lash flirtatious young ladies in the public square, and this disgrace is about to be meted out to her when the husband arrives and saves the day.

The story of the picture is so conventional that hardly the best of a production would be able to polish off its rusty spots. Here it is embellished with few situations of a strong character and as a result there is much padding introduced. True, the padding is pretty in practically every instance, but that doesn't alter the case. Nor are the subtitles of "The Lash" meritorious. They don't jibe well with the action and they are filled with quotations which the character of the story does not warrant.

Marie Doro is a winsome heroine and Elliott Dexter is a gentlemanly hero. There are James Neill, Thomas Delmar, Veda McEvers, Raymond Hatton, Jane Wolff and Josephine Rice is support. The story was written by Paul West, the scenario done by George D. Proctor and James Young, while the direction was in charge of Mr. Young.

"LOVE NEVER DIES"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THERE has always been to us something quite unconvincing about a girl dancing in the moonlight on a lawn. Professional dancers may be so merged with aesthetics and temperaments that they do this, but when it is seen on the screen it seems to lack realism and consequently it is more liable to get a laugh than to throw the spectator into the intended mood. "Love Never Dies" has some such scenes, not a great lot, but enough to call for the above remark.

One thing, however, may be said in support of these scenes, and that is that the dancing in them is quite the real thing. It is done by Ruth Stonehouse, who appears as a dancer in the picture. She lives with her uncle in a small city in France, and when her childhood lover, a violinist, appears, she elopes with him, forgetting all about a marriage ceremony.

The dancing girl goes to Paris, where her name is made over night. The leader of the orchestra continually forces his attentions upon her, but she shows no love for him at all. Finally the violinist sends an opera of his composition to the leader for production and the leader, being a villain, steals it. The hero sees the opening performance with the dancer dancing the leading part, and then after a breakdown on her part there comes a reunion between the lovers, the uncle at last seeing that nothing can stand between them.

Harvey Gates, inspired by Mendelssohn's "Spring Song," wrote the story, and William Worthington directed with Friend F. Baker at the camera. Franklyn Farnum as the violinist and Kingsley Benedict as the leader are the other principals, while in support appear Arthur Hoyt, Mrs. Witting, William Canfield, Wadsworth Harris, and T. D. Crittenden.

"A SISTER OF SIX"

(Triangle-Fine Arts—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

SEVEN of the bright spots of "A Sister of Six" are Bessie Love and six of the Fine Arts kiddies, the best little performers on the screen. Miss Love appears as a daughter of a New Englander settled in California in the year 1860, at which time the atmosphere of Mexico was dominant in the state. Her father is killed by plotters, who seek his land for the gold it contains. Accompanied by her six charges she goes to her uncle in the East and after his stony heart has been softened by association with his relatives, he takes them back West again to secure legal possession of their rightful lands.

At this point in the story the writer has brought into play old yet certain methods of effecting a thrilling climax. There are the Mexicans, who surround the ranch house, its meagre band of defenders, the prolonged fight, the sensational ride for assistance and at last the appearance of soldiers to save the day. Scenes like this keep the observer right on the edge of his proverbial seat. As pictured here by the Franklins who directed, they are played up to the fullest possible advantage. They get over with a crash. Some of the more intimate bits, which are interpolated between the panorama should, however, be toned down a bit. When a man is shot in the stomach blood may dribble from his mouth, but few of us like to see it dribble in a closeup. The cutter has a little more work to do there.

In general the direction of the Franklins is exceptional and exceptional pictures are getting to be quite usual with them. The scenes secured are delightful, the costuming good and the photography generally excellent. The handling of the children is done with a wonderfully realistic effect. They are all shown in closeups during the fighting scenes and their expressions would do justice to the artist with years of experience behind him.

A. D. Sears does some fine work as the heavy, Ralph Lewis as the uncle gets his role over in good fashion and Frank Bennett has the part opposite Miss Love. A competent cast, never forgetting the kiddies, is there for support. Bernard McConville is the author.

"PRUDENCE, THE PIRATE"

(Pathe-Thanhouser—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THERE was a leader following the title on this picture dedicating its contents to those tired of the materialistic, who wanted to hark back a number of years and enjoy over again their childhood dreams—such as playing pirate. Oh, happy thoughts! and what an ideal one for a picture. Never in a reasonably long period of reviewing have we laid eyes on such an enchanting subject as "Prudence, the Pirate." Looking at it, the walls of the theatre melt into nothing, the screen becomes a mirror reflecting the humorous prank of an unconventional and winsome girl, who is so fresh, so distantly removed from anything pertaining to grease paint and wig, that you smile patronizingly at her every action. Making a person feel patronizing is, by the way, a sure way of pleasing him. And you laugh at little Prue's pranks, smile at the delightful pictures of human nature that the story offers, and thrill at the climax.

We are more than pleased to find Mr. Thanhouser among the producers who believe that a picture can get over minus sex, murder and companion elements. People go to a theatre to be entertained. Maybe a little sex stuff now and then and a little murder is necessary at times to open the way to a drama. But how much nicer it is to see a picture that fulfills its mission to entertain without resorting to gruesome methods. One gets a new lease on life after witnessing "Prudence, the Pirate."

The story was prepared by Agnes Johnston and produced by William Parke. We have endeavored to give an idea of the quality of their work already. Dwelling more on specific points of the production, let it be further said that the subtitles are some of the best ever seen on the screen. They are well written and practically every one of them brings a ripple of laughter. The continuity is smooth and the scenes well staged.

The story tells of a young girl longing for adventure who can't "see" the life led by her socially ambitious aunt. Aunty wants her to marry a dude, but he has never done anything to be proud of, so that taboos him. Prue, her head full of pirates from the stories told her by the old butler, hires an old ship and a gang of wicked looking fellows for crew and sails the seas all rigged up in true pirate style. She captures Aunty and the dude and imprisons them on the ship. Hard work works wonders with the dude and of course when a fire aboard ship comes he proves himself a true gallant by saving the life of Prue.

Justice can not be done in relating the synopsis of the story. The touches of the author and the various scenes done by the principal characters must be seen to be appreciated. There are Riley Chamberlin as the old butler and Flora Finch as Aunty, who do some excellent comedy. There are Barnett Parker as the dude and William Parks, Jr., as a youngster who believes himself in love with Prue, who do sterling work.

But most of all, there is Gladys Hulette as Prue. We know of one idolized star who had better look to her laurels if Miss Hulette keeps on in the direction she travels in this picture. She is pretty and she is an actress, and in "Prudence, the Pirate" she lives the part to perfection.

"THE ESSANAY-CHAPLIN REVUE OF 1916"

(Essanay—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

THIS multiple-reel release was arranged by Essanay from the previously released Chaplin comedies "The Tramp," "His New Job," and "A Night Out." The editing was carefully done, so that the five reels have as much continuity and consistency as is necessary in a slap-stick picture.

At a trade showing in Chicago, over one hundred exhibitors viewed the picture and were obviously entertained. Those who know the usual death-watch atmosphere of these showings will appreciate what this means.

The three pictures from which the "Revue" is assembled, while perhaps not the comedian's best, are excellent. There is not a single one of Chaplin's characteristic eccentricities that is not brought in at least once during the film's progress. This fact, in addition to the innumerable bits of original "business" introduced, ought to make this release sure-fire with audiences that like Chaplin.

Each exhibitor will have to decide for himself the question of whether or not his audience will care for five reels of Chaplin in one dose.

Chaplin, as a tramp, is wondering along a country road, when a girl is attacked by a gang of hoboes. He rescues her by using his feet, teeth, and knock-out mallet, and is given a job on her father's farm. He gets much amusement out of milking a cow and other bucolic pursuits. One night he routs a gang of burglars, and being wounded in the fray, is nursed by the girl. The girl's sweetheart visits her, and Chaplin, heartbroken, returns to the city. He gets a job in a moving picture studio, but by his blundering spoils all the pictures and drives the director insane.

Saturday night he decides to spend his week's salary, and spends most of it on strong liquor. He gets into the wrong room in a hotel and is beaten up by a jealous husband.

"HER FATHER'S SON"

(Morosco-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE Morosco Company offers Vivian Martin here in a Civil War story that is not all blood and thunder. In fact, there is little blood and thunder in its make-up. "Her Father's Son," as might be hazarded from the title, is a comedy-drama with the accent all on the comedy. Miss Martin masquerading in boy's clothes is delightfully attractive, although we must confess that the characters in the picture who were fooled by her disguise should never be allowed to roam about New York. Some one might sell them Times Square or the subway.

Miss Martin is Frances, the daughter of a poor man. Previous to her father's death, her wealthy uncle who is mixed on his i's and e's writes to his brother, saying that he will adopt the "boy." So the "boy" comes after her father's death all dressed up like a Southern gentleman and then the fun starts. Indeed, there is a wealth of comedy introduced which is spattered lightly with romance. At the outbreak of the war little Frances works on one side and another with equal favor. Her romance with a Northern soldier ends happily after a fine dash of comedy.

We strongly recommend this to the exhibitor who wants a good five-reel comedy-drama. There is little that is gruesome or dark about it, and there is much that is extremely humorous. Miss Martin has excellent support in the way of Alfred Vosburgh, Herbert Standing, Helen Eddy, Joe Massey, Jack Lawton, Lucille Ward and Tom Bates. William Taylor directed, and the camera work is that of Homer Scott.

"SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE"

(Triangle-Ince—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WRITTEN by the late Richard Harding Davis, "Somewhere in France" possesses a certain air of adventure, mystery and fascination that is not often found in five-reel subjects. We should say offhand, merely for the sake of comparison, that it equals the previous Ince war picture, "Shell-43," in every way.

If we remember correctly, "Shell 43" was unanimously acclaimed one of the best of the Triangle-Ince releases. And as in that previous release, "Somewhere in France" contains no shrieking, tearing battle scenes. It is about spies—the spies furnish all the fight that is necessary.

Mr. Davis' story has been given a very good production. J. G. Hawkes did the scenario, and did a good one. The story moves swiftly from start to finish, is developed clearly, and brings to a close with a good surprise. Charles Giblyn in the directing has provided convincingly realistic foreign scenes, and the types presented in the cast are excellent. The camera work is Dal Clawson's, and as such needs no further comment.

Marie Chaumontel, a German spy, steals valuable papers from her lover, Henry Ravignac of the French army, with the result that he is disgraced. Sooner than suffer years of imprisonment, he takes his own life. His brother, Charles Ravignac, resolves to avenge his downfall. So he enters the German secret service and works hand in hand with Marie, at the same time informing his own side of the German movements. In the end, of course, he causes the arrest of Marie and receives all sorts of honors for his own clever work.

There is something of a tendency to keep the identity of Charles Ravignac a secret after he has become a spy by covering the face of the actor who plays the role, Hoard Hickman, with a green eyeshade.

This does not, however, fool the observer much. Mr. Hickman gives a likable performance in this role, while Louise Glaum as the adventuress-spy plays well, although accentuating the former qualities of her role sometimes at the expense of the latter. Jerome Storm does a fine bit as Henry Ravignac, and others are Joseph J. Dowling, Fanny Midgley, George Fisher and Carl Ullman.

"THE WAR BRIDE'S SECRET"

(Fox—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY E. DRAW

THIS picture has an exceptionally strong dramatic story, with a wide appeal. It depicts the secret marriage of a young Scotch lass to her soldier lover, who is about to leave for the front. Later news reaches the villages that her husband has been killed in action, and Jean, who has shared the secret of her marriage with her mother, realizes that the babe must have a father, she therefore marries Robin, an old farmer.

Later news is received that Jean's husband has not been killed but is just recovering from his wounds. When Colin returns home it becomes very obvious to Robin that Jean has not forgotten her old love, so he decides to go away and leave her in peace and happiness with Colin.

Virginia Pearson, as Jean, will please, as her acting is strong and convincing. Walter Law is excellent, rendering quite the best interpretation of his career. His make-up was perfect and one could feel that he was indeed a Scotchman. Glen White, as Colin, and Stuart Sage, as Jean's brother, were both were good in their respective roles.

No small praise is due to Kenean Buel, who directed the production. He succeeded in securing the correct atmosphere, color and touch of human nature.

There is a wealth of detail and comedy in this picture which will be highly appreciated by any audience.

JUAN LAHOUD BUYS FOURTH CAMERAGRAPH

SENOR JUAN LAHOUD, of Caracas, Venezuela, son of the most prominent motion picture exhibitor in that country, has just purchased his fourth Powers' Cameragraph, to be installed in one of his father's theatres in that country. Mr. Lahoud is a large purchaser of films, and other motion picture accessories, and has recently made shipment of a number of the latest American features and of one of the large serials.

Mr. Lahoud is himself an actor of ability, and at the present time is endeavoring to arrange a test with a large producing company here with a view of appearing on the screen in this country. Aside from speaking Spanish perfectly, he speaks English and French fluently, and is the author of several scenarios of merit, which he has been successful in placing. Arthur J. Lang, of the Nicholas Power Company, is the live wire who helped Mr. Lahoud in securing the films and accessories he recently purchased.

ARROW CAMERAMAN OLD HAND IN BUSINESS

HENRY CRONJAGER, chief camera man of the Arrow Film Corporation, is one of the real veterans of the motion picture business. For the last twenty years photography has been his profession. In Cronjager's early days in New York he worked for noted portrait photographers, which gave him a thorough practical knowledge in the various branches of his profession.

When the Edison company built its Bronx studio, Frank L. Dyer, then president of the company, engaged Cronjager as Edison's first cameraman. He stayed with that company five years, working and traveling with their best directors throughout the United States, Cuba and Canada. After his Edison engagement Cronjager went to Biograph, where he photographed the big Klaw & Erlanger six-reel productions, such as "Lord Chumley" and "The Road to Yesterday." Two years after Cronjager joined the Biograph staff, he was engaged by C. J. Hite of Thanhouser. He remained with Mr. Hite until W. H. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow company, secured his services.

WELL-KNOWN CRITIC VISITS METRO-YORKE STUDIO

GRACE KINGSLEY, the Pacific Coast critic, who has become almost as well known as Alan Dale, for her frank reviews, which appear in the Los Angeles Times, visited the studio last week, accompanied by Seymour Tally, owner of the large theatre, bearing the same name.

The two visitors were guests of Harold Lockwood and May Allison, who were at that time appearing in scenes from "Big Tremaine," the Yorke adaptation of Marie Van Vorst's novel. After the sightseeing tour of the studio was over, General Manager Fred J. Balshofer and Director Henry Otto invited them into the Metro projection room, where completed scenes of "Big Tremaine" were exhibited. In these scenes appeared Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Lester Cuneo, Lillian Hayward and the balance of the supporting cast.

BIG CROWD AT OPENING OF NEW THEATRE ON PARK ROW

ON Saturday, September 30, at twelve o'clock noon, the doors of the "City Hall" theatre, 31 Park Row, New York, were opened to the public. The building cost sixty thousand dollars, and is built on property valued at sixty thousand dollars. The Reliable Contracting Company, of 230 Grand street, New York City, are the owners. Louis Sheinert was the architect, and the building was built by M. Sharero & Son. The house contains a Kimball organ, costing eight thousand dollars.

The theatre is in the financial section of the city, and thousands of people pass the place daily. The date set for the official opening for film men is October 9. The house was filled to capacity the opening day and the Triangle picture, "Diane of the Follies," was the feature attraction. "Her Sailor Lover," another Triangle picture, was also shown. It was just one continual laugh. Fifteen cents admission is charged at the "City Hall." Mr. M. Weinstack, the managing director, says he intends to follow the policy of the Strand.

REPRESENTATIVES OF BARTOLA ORGAN BUSY

T. D. WAISS, special representative for the Bartola, spent last week in Omaha, Neb. The object of his visit was the superintending of a Bartola Orchestra in the Boulevard theatre. While in Omaha he closed with Eric Hallgren, owner of the Suburban theatre, for the installing of a Bartola.

Chas. C. Pyle, general sales agent of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, spent the first part of the week in Cleveland, Ohio, where he sold instruments to two theatres. One of these was the Yale theatre, owned by the Yale Reality Company. The other sale was made to the firm of Bark & Greenwald, owners of the Market Square theatre.

Harvey E. Hanson, whose Palace theatre in Antigo, Wis., has just been completed, has been spending a few weeks in Chicago visiting the film exchanges.

"CHARITY?"

(Frank Powell Productions—Six Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

SINCE the initial showing of "Charity?" Frank Powell has reduced its length from eight to six reels. The elimination of two reels naturally speeds the action up a bit, but even now "Charity?" is far removed from perfection. Chiefly at fault is the construction of the scenario and the direction. The scenes lack the proper tempo—the observer fails to "feel" the picture. We are still wondering over the fact that Mr. Powell produced it, because he has done such good work in the past. It seems to be just a case of "mistakes will happen," and it is regrettable that "Charity?" is Mr. Powell's first picture for his own company.

While the picture can hardly be designated as entertainment, it will by its contents awake a good deal of interest in organized charity. Founded to a certain extent on recent investigations into charitable institutions, principally orphan asylums, the picture shows the disgraceful conditions that existed in such places. Mr. Powell is wise in not attacking all organized charity for the shortcomings of certain branches of it. In his asylum scenes he shows us half a dozen children using the same toothbrush, he dwells on the fact that they are dirty and underfed, and that the little food they do get is worse than pigs' fare.

The story, written by Linda A. Griffith, shows how a sister and brother successfully overcame the evils of their hereditary environment. The girl, Mary, tells the story of her life on the witness stand, starting with events before her birth, about which she could hardly be expected to have such detailed knowledge. She describes the death of her father and then tells how she and her brother were confined in an orphan asylum.

Then comes her brother's escape from the institution, and in a flash back to the court room scene she says that she has never seen him since that day, but still she goes on telling all about his experiences since he left, in great detail. This is poor scenario contruction. No doubt Mr. Powell meant to imply that the adventures of the brother be told as a parallel story, but he has not made this clear. Well, the brother who has never had any education blossoms forth as a lawyer, and toward the end of his sister's case he enters the court room and exposes the owner of the asylum as a fraud and a white slaver. That the owner is a white slaver is not made clear in this second edition of "Charity?" as it was in the first.

Space does not permit going into the details of the direction. It is poor and that's all there is to it. The camera work by David Calcagni is inferior. Never is the photography very clear, while the court room scenes are so badly handled from this end that they are full of halation. And on top of it all, even with the editing that the picture has received it is still too long.

Linda A. Griffith as the girl, Creighton Hale as the boy, and Sheldon Lewis as the drunken father are featured. Others are John Dunn, Elizabeth Burbridge, Veta Searl, and Sam J. Ryan.

"THE HIDDEN SCAR"

(Peerless-World—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY THEODORE OSBORN ELTONHEAD

"THE Hidden Scar" is a picture that would please on almost any program. It contains a good, tense, dramatic story, well produced, ably directed, and excellently acted. Its theme is strong and wholesome, a keen arraignment of hypocrisy as it is found prevalent in many of the so-called Christian churches throughout the country.

The story was written by Mrs. Owen Bronson, and though she cannot be credited with any great amount of originality in either her conception or the manner in which she has treated it, still she has evolved a good strong story and one that carries a mighty forceful lesson.

Janet Hall is a pretty, attractive young girl who is tempted and wronged by Henry Dalton, and gives birth to an illegitimate child. Greatly displeased with her mode of life and with her whole being wrapped up in her child, she begs Dalton to marry her, which he refuses to do. He is suddenly killed and on his death-bed leaves her a cottage in the country and a small income. There she meets and falls in love with Dale Overton, the young minister of the church. For a time she refuses to marry him on account of her early sin, but after listening to his sermons in which he preaches charity, forgiveness and tolerance, she consents. Later her past is disclosed and her husband renounces her. Stuart Doane, Overton's great friend, comes to the defence of Janet, denouncing Overton as an arch hypocrite, saying that irrespective of what she has been she is pure and noble now. Overton finally sees things in their true light and takes Janet in his arms.

Ethel Clayton had the role of Janet and handled it most effectively. Holbrook Blinn was in the somewhat minor part of Stuart Doane, and Irving Cummings was excellent as the young minister. The picture was staged under the capable direction of Barry O'Neil, who evolved a meritorious piece of work in every particular. Others in the cast were Montagu Love, Madge Evans, Edward M. Kimball and Mrs. Woodward.

"THE SOCIAL BUCCANEER"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE gentle art of burglarly and charity practised a la Robin Hood will ever hold an audience in an everage state of suspense and fascination. "The Social Buccaneer" which features J. Warren Kerrigan in such a role is of this type of motion picture. Taken from the novel by Frederick S. Isham it manages to entertain averagely and sometimes unusually over the greater portion of its length. The only weak thing about it is its ending. The picture does not boast of such an essential. It just stops. The social buccaneer decides to reform at the instigation of his fiancee and so he does. The ending lacks what we are accustomed to term as punch.

But lack of a proper finale can not condemn "The Social Buccaneer" as a whole. There is enough sustaining power in its body to put it over and put it over strong. It has been produced capably by Jack Conway from a scenario by Fred Myton and each scene in it is most realistic. As the first part of the story is supposed to transpire in China, this is saying a good deal. The settings in that part of the picture are really quite unusual in atmosphere and realism. Again has the director shown his good taste in those numerous scenes which transpire at the house party of Goldberg. A night garden party has been very well handled. Added to this the photography by Ed Kull is excellent.

Bruce, a foreign buyer sees on on of his trips abroad a Chinese pirate, who robs from the rich to give to the poor. This impresses him and later when he overhears an attack on the life of the pirate he saves him. In America Bruce resolves to follow the same line of action. The real drama starts at the garden party of his employer, where he (Bruce) sets out to procure a valuable string of pearls possessed by the daughter of the house. He is almost apprehended in this act by Caglioni, a half breed Chinee, whose enmity he incurred in China when he defended the life of the pirate. He is successful, however, after a world of rapid fire incidents but after all he reforms for the sake of the girl.

Tabloid Reviews for the Busy Exhibitor

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM SERVICE

"A Sauerkraut Symphony." (Kalem. Tues., Oct. 17.)—This is a comedy out of the ordinary in that in addition to Ham and Bud and Ethel Teare we have Henry Murdock in the cast. The fun is fast and furious and there are many laughable situations. An anarchist is blown into the air while sitting over the steam whistle of the sauerkraut factory, and is foiled in his attempt to blow up the place for the time being. But the bomb he has been carrying and which was blown into the clouds with him comes down later and blows the plant up. Murdoch plays the anarchist, Ethel Teare the proprietor's daughter, and Ham and Bud are the workmen. Altogether this is a novel comedy release and a good number.

"The Yellow Hand." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Oct. 18.)—This is the eleventh of the "Girl from Frisco" Series, and has for a theme the smuggling of Chinese girls into this country through a secret order of Chinamen. The Congressman lover (True Boardman) of Ace Brent's daugbter (Marin Sais) is appointed agent for the government to stop the smuggling, and with Miss Brent makes his entry into the secret meeting place of the "Tong of the Yellow Hand," only to get into trouble. After a terrific struggle between the government agent and the Chinamcn, in which Brent comes to his assistance, they gain admittance to an inner room just in time to save the girl who is being strangled by order of the "Yellow Hand." They in turn are rescued by the police, who have been summoned in the meantime. The gang is captured and the leader takes a trip to the sea via an underground sewer into which he fell when shot by Miss Brent. This release is extra thrilling and carries an intense interest throughout. The photography and acting are on a par with the rest of the series.

"A Daring Chance." (Kalem. Sat., Oct. 21.)—For a change, again we have instead of "How shall we try to kill her next?" which the producers seem to have adopted for the "Hazards of Helen," "How will we try to kill the boy next?" Little "Billy Boy" is left alone on a speeding gasoline car from which the lineman has fallen, and only by the efforts of Helen is he saved. She commandeers a locomotive and gives chase. Catching up with the car on a parallel track, she leans far out and grabbing the outstretched hands of the boy swings him to safety alongside of her, as the little car smashes into a stalled train. This is one of the best thrills that the "Hazards" has pulled yet, and that's going some. The same good acting that characterized others of the series is here evidcnt and this release is one of the best yet.

"His Little Wife." (Essanay. Three reels. Sat., Oct. 7.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Only a Rose." (Selig. Three Reels. Mon., Oct. 16.)—This picture gives the impression of having been made some time ago, since the acting is elementary, the setting simple, and the story absurd. Some audiences will doubtless enjoy the play, but not those accustomed to the comparative perfection of modern productions. The cast, which interprets the scenario literally, without any fine shades of character portraying, consists of Robyn Adair, Virginia Kirtley, Leo Pierson, E. J. Brady, Eugenie Forde and Luella Maxan. On the last reel is a few hundred feet of rustic comedy fairly well done. Dorn is the faithful bookkeeper of Phelps, a wealthy broker. Hun, also in the employ of Phelps, loves Dorn's daughter, Alma, but forgets her when he meets his employer's daughter. One day Phelps is attacked by a disappointed speculator, and is rescued by Dorn. Hun takes the credit for this rescue, and becomes Phelp's protege. Dorn is weakened by the experience, and becomes sick. He is discharged by Phelps, and he and his daughter are poverty stricken. Phelps discovers that Dorn was really his saver, and goes to make amends. Finding the faithful employee dead, he gives his daughter a check for $10,000, and leaves the sobbing girl prostrate on her father's body.

"An Eventful Evening." (Selig. Sat., Oct. 21.)—This Western comedy produced by Tom Mix is far below the standard set by the cowboy director. It has practically none of the cowboy stunts usually introduced in these pictures, and the action is, for the most part, prolonged and stupid. Supporting Tom Mix are Victoria Forde, Betty Keller and Pat Chrisman. Jim Mathews, a ranch owner, wants Jack Winton to fall in love with his daughter, Betty, but the perverse man loves his other daughter, Marian. Betty overhears Jack and Marian planning to elope at midnight, and veiled, takes Betty's place. Jack discovers the deception, gets the right girl, and marries her.

"The Fable of the Kittenish Superanns and the World-Weary Snipes." (Essanay. Two Reels. Tues., Oct. 17.)—The story of this George Ade comedy, adapted from one of his recent fables in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, is particularly mirthful. As usual, the sub-titles are pungent with Ade's inimitable slangy philosophy. While not on a par with the scenario, the acting, settings, directing and photography are adequate. This is a good polite comedy. A cove went back to his home stamping grounds to flash his scads of wampum on his former side-kicks. He bought the biggest mausoleum in town, and started in to pull a few house parties. The first week-end session was to be a peace conference for the antique quackey-doodles and spectacled hens. The second party was to be a hurray jubilee for the gay debutantes and blithe lads from the 'varsity. The seres and yellows arrived, and from the first tap of the gong, the bridles were off. The female members of his old Sunday school class began to blow cigarette smoke out of their eyes, ears and noses. Before he could suggest pre-historic euchre, the loud needle was at work on the ragamaphone. He saw reputable women with grandchildren get in the middle of the floor and slap Father Time in the face. The old birds arose Monday morning all freshened up, having slept a grand total of six hours since Saturday night. After such exuberance, the old cove feared that the rollicking juniors due the following week would put his home on the fritz. When the buds and striplings came, he found himself surrounded by pale young women and gloomy he-whiffets. They hunted dime corners and lapsed into death chamber conversation. The host tried to figure why so many young lives had been clouded. On Monday the amateur pall-bearers said good-by to him as though they had met him somewhere before. Moral: Youth is the time for gravity.

"Dreamy Dud in the African War Zone." (Essanay. Split Reel. Wed., Oct. 18.)—Wallace Carlson's animated cartoons are here, combined by double exposure with human figures to make a novel and fast moving kind of comedy. The last half of the reel is devoted to Western scenic.

"Marooned." (Essanay. Three Reels. Sat., Oct. 21.)—Not shown for review; the story follows: Nine Holliday, a novelist, gets a chance to experience the non-conventional situations she puts in her books. She goes on a yacht cruise with Elliot, a millionaire. The yacht is wrecked, and Prentiss, a sailor, rescues her. Ashore, Prentiss saves her from the drunken advances of Elliot. As the weeks pass, she falls in love with the stalwart seaman. A boat comes to their rescue and Elliot, taking Nina, leaves Prentiss behind. Under cover of darkness the girl leaps over the side of the ship, and swims back to her lover. The cast is composed of Edward Arnold, Alice McChesney, Fred Malatesta and Arthur Bates.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"That Sharp Note." (Beauty. Two reels. Mon., Oct. 9.)—This picture has a number of good points, is amusing and entertaining, and will please any audience. Beezer leaves America with a note for Ambassador Jones to deliver from "Filson" to "the Flyser." After stirring up the Kingsland spies and meeting with numerous adventures, he hands the note over, and the Ambassador starts out to deliver it. Soon after Beezer receives word that "Filson's" quarrel has been patched up with "The Flyser," and the note does not reach its destination. The cast includes John Sheehan and Carol Halloway.

"Inoculating Hubby." (Cub. Fri., Oct. 13.)—This is a very pleasing picture, containing much good comedy and one which will afford excellent amusement. Peaceful bliss reigned in the Newlywed's household until wifie's mother announced her intention of paying the young couple a visit. No sooner does mother-in-law set foot in the house than she starts to run the house as she thinks fit. Finally mother calls Prof. Pill to restore her son-in-law to reason. Ere he can cure the patient the adoption of three kittens by Hubby causes both the wife and doctor to upbraid mother so fiercely that she packs her belongings and departs. The cast includes Neal Burns, Betty Compson, Stella Adams and Harry Rattenberry.

"Ducking a Discord." (Vogue. Sun., Oct. 15.)—This is just a fair comedy. The action is slow and there is far too much repetition. Rube's wife is an expert at the Dutch In and Out. The house is filled with the music of the old accordion from morning until night. Being utterly tired of his wife, Rube decides to put her in a bag and throw her in the river. She is rescued by Ben, and together they intend to give Rube a fright. They cover their faces with flour and interrupt Rube as he is making love to Lillian. Another time she appears as he is sitting with a gang of pickpockets, and this time she scares the whole crowd. Rube Miller plays the lead.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"The Wrath of Cactus Moore." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Oct. 17.)—The ancient antagonism of an old rancher toward the mayor of the town for a time stands between the love of their children and the culmination of the romance, but the old man is finally won over. An enjoyable comedy-drama of average type which was written and directed by William V. Mong. Mong also plays the old rancher and gets a good bit of humor from the part. Others are Charles Ryan, Peggy Coudray and Mrs. Mattox.

"His Own Nemesis." (Nestor. Mon., Oct. 16.)—An average Nestor by Walter Newman, a little mediocre in its finale but keeping one in a good state of comedy suspense over most of its length. The wife of a temperamental musician quarrels with him and goes to pose for an artist. The artist and the musician are friends and the former tutors the grief-stricken husband in the art of fencing, duelling and boxing so he will be able to beat up the man who stole his wife. It eventually comes out that the artist has been planning his own downfall, but the friends patch up the quarrel. Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean are the principals.

"Through Baby's Voice." (Laemmle. Two reels. Wed., Oct. 18.)—A most delightful comedy drama, one that can be classified with the few exceptional two-reel offerings. Calder Johnstone prepared the scenario and George Cochrane directed. The story shows how a little girl through her childish simplicitly reunited her parents, who separated over a mere quarrel. Zoe Beck as the child does some of the cleverest acting ever seen from a miss of her tender years. Edna Maison and Douglas Gerrard play the parents, while L. M. Wells carries a winning character part as the old lawyer.

"Safety First." (L-Ko. Wed., Oct. 18.)—Two crooks fall out and one elopes with the safe containing a time-clock bomb as well as the other crook. An explosion follows after a long chase. This picture falls quite flat, because neither of the actors who play the crooks are comedians, while the tricks of the chase are done amateurishly.

"The Eel." (Imp. Two reels. Thurs., Oct. 19.)—An out-of-the-ordinary underworld drama that gets over in exceedingly strong style. The district attorney and a girl of the secret service join a band of crooks with the purpose of bringing them to justice, but each is unaware of the other's identity. A romance follows and the finale finds each happy in the discovery that the other is not a crook. Harry Keenan and Betty Schade are the principals in this. The direction throughout is good, particularly in respect to the underworld atmosphere.

"The Conspiracy." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., Oct. 21.)—In which a clerk in the employ of a railroad firm gets information by the "listening in" of the telephone boy, that proves the confidential secretary to the president false to his employer's interests. This is an entirely satisfactory melodrama with a thriller in it when the hero stops a runaway. Harry Carey, L. C. Shumway, Edith Johnson and E. N. Wallack are the leads. William Parke prepared the scenario.

"Pat's Pasting Ways." (Nestor. Fri., Oct. 20.)—Pat Rooney is the bill poster who, being prohibited the use of stationary objects as stands, takes to pasting his advertisements on animals, is the center of this comedy, which is of fair value. Marcia Moore and Jane Bernoudy are others who appear. Charles J. Wilson, Jr., prepared the scenario.

"Beans and Bullets." (Joker. Sat., Oct. 21.)—The old Joker cast consisting of Gale Henry, William Franey, Charles Conklin, Lillian Peacock and Milburn Moranti, are somewhat lost in this comedy prepared by Harry Wulze. It is staged in Mexico and is burlesque throughout, but the business and tricks perpetrated by the cast are not as funny as in the older jokers.

"Main 4400." (Victor. Two reels. Sun., Oct. 22.)—A light comedy in which a young man to be near a nurse of his liking who is employed in a lunatic asylum, pretends insanity. This is taken from a story by Mary Ryder in which there were many humorous possibilities, all of which have been well realized by those concerned in its production. Herbert Rawlinson and Agnes Vernon have the lovers' roles, while Carl von Schiller and Harold Mathews render support.

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

"In the Mesh of Her Hair." (Pathe. Two reels.)—An old-style picture about which everything is so frankly elementary that its crudeness will spoil it for those of better tastes. It concerns itself with the romance of a wealthy writer and the daughter of a fisherman. They are separated by the man's mother for a time and both suffer all sorts of tortures during this period. A reunion brings the picture to a close. The cast includes Eleanor Woodruff, Paul Panzer and Irving Cummings.

"The Grip of Evil." (Balboa. Two reels. Fourteenth Episode.)—The last episode of this serial, entitled "The Answer," shows the millionaire in the hands of a gang of crooks who contemplate killing him unless he gives them money. What does he do but touch all their hearts by pleading to them in behalf of their mothers. Later he comes to the conclusion that humanity can be reformed if an interest is taken in it. His wedding with Grace Cos, the social worker, ends the picture.

"Heine and the Magic Man." (Starlight.)—Heine goes into a theatre where a magician is doing tricks. He succeeds in showing him up, and then a general riot starts that resembles the usual riots of Mr. Mittenthal's pictures to a close degree.

"In the Isle of Kuyuschu." (Pathe. Split reel.)—Ordinary views of this Japanese island are shown here. They are in color, but would appear to better advantage in black and white, as the process used in the coloring was not a good one. On the same reel with "Athletic Movements."

"Athletic Movements." (Pathe. Split reel.)—More of those vastly interesting pictures taken with a rapid camera. Here we have tennis, spiral ball, rope jumping and other sports shown a good many times slower on the screen than they are actually played. On the same reel with "In the Isle of Kuyuschu."

I.; behind German fighting lines on western European battle front; Harvard football team defeats Bates in opening game of season, Cambridge, Mass.; John Aitken wins Astor Cup Race at Sheepshead Bay Speedway, New York.

Reel Life, No. 22.—In addition to the baseball game, which is a reproduction of a world's series game last season, there are two other interesting subjects. One shows "The Wood Workers of the Southern Mountains." The other records adventures during "A Night with a Police Dog." The wood workers are mountaineers, who with a few simple tools make furnitpre that is notable for its strength and real beauty. There is nothing ornate about the various pieces, but each is a charming example of simplicity in design and construction. In recent years frequent publicity has been given to the efficient work being done by dogs trained for police service. A typical night's work of one of these four-footed guardians of the peace is shown. The manner in which the dog is sent scouting by the officer it accompanies, and how it has been trained to meet any emergency, is vividly portrayed.

"See America First." (Mutual Magazine. Oct. 4.)—This reel is devoted to the fine old Southern city of Baltimore, which contains so many monuments, parks and squares. Druid Hill Park, Mount Vernon Place, the beautiful new home of the Johns Hopkins University, the inner harbor with its fleet of oyster boats, and the magnificent public buildings are among the more important views recorded by the camera. On the same reel with Baltimore there is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic entitled "Abe's Opossum." Harry Palmer has allowed his fancy to run riot in this picture and the result is just one sustained laugh.

BE PARTICULAR, EXAMINE THE SEEMINGLY LITTLE THINGS ABOUT THE PROJECTOR YOU BUY

It's the "little" things that make a projection machine give perfect results.

The projector you have been thinking about—does it have parts that received a Special Heat treatment and were ground to insure accuracy? Can you remove the Framing Device in a second if necessary, are the Gears made of solid high grade cold rolled steel?

Does it have as the MOTIOGRAPH has, all these important points of merit, an enviable reputation and an unequalled record for endurance and economy?

This is a matter of vital importance to you. Make sure.

Accessory News

SECTION OF MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Everything for Theatre, Exchange and Studio

The Operator and the Projection Room

WE have now taken up what we consider to be the two most important features in the actual construction of a theatre; that is, the two points which the prospective owner must insist upon, for as we have pointed out, the average architect has shown that he knows nothing about the importance of either.

1. The line of projection must be horizontal or as nearly so as possible.
2. The projection room must be large.

TAKING for granted that both of these points have been taken care of, the next step is the question of what goes into the projection room—that is, the accessory equipment.

In the first place, the heart of every picture theatre is the projection room and the nucleus about which it runs is the operator. Therefore we must take it for granted that the theatre owner has engaged a competent operator—not someone who merely knows how to thread a machine and throw on a switch, who is careless and only works by the clock, grinding out the picture without thought of the box office receipts—but a man who is interested in his work, makes projection problems a study and exerts every nerve and muscle in his body toward the one end, putting the best possible picture within his power on the screen.

THIS is the real projection expert—the man who can command a salary in advance of any scale ever laid down—the man who when he takes charge can actually show the results of his work at the ticket window. These men unfortunately are scarce, though there is plenty of help at hand through which the apprentice can obtain information and develop himself into an expert.

WE must therefore take it for granted that our theatre owner has engaged a man who is capable. His work, however, has only just begun, for he must install the tools with which the operator can perform his duties—and here again is room for criticism.

How many men have you heard say something like this: "What's the good in all this equipment? All I need is enough to put a picture on the screen. If these manufacturers keep on making new instruments and the theatre owners are fools enough to buy them, we'll all go broke or else the operator will sit up there and have nothing to do."

DON'T fool yourself and don't use this as an argument for under-equipping the operating room or underpaying a competent operator.

True it is that new equipment is being manufactured. Only about a year ago all lamp houses were hand fed—now there are several automatic arc feeds on the market—less work for the operator, to be sure, but better pictures? Vastly. So it goes, but the first-class operator who is competent and who is relieved of one burden spends that much more attention on some other point which improves the screen results.

ANOTHER illustration which will serve to bring out our point. How many theatres are there today which are running an alternating current when direct could be had and should be used? A great many more than there should be—is near enough. Why are they doing it? Because someone has told the owner that all converters are fakes, or is it because they think their operator, if he is worth anything, should be able to get along without it? It is a mystery we can't answer, for they are giving an inferior result on the screen which they blame to the operator. It is another case of not applying the saying, "Don't be afraid to spend a dime when you will get a dollar back." Then, too, there is a question of the saving on the "juice" bill.

What happened before the motor drive came into use? Was the operator any the less valuable after it was put on? Absolutely not; nor will he be in the future, for every improvement which can be added to the projection room will give him that much more time to attend to the result upon the screen and improve it.

THERE must, however, be something else tied up with all this in order that the operating room equipment may be continually in repair. It is the service from a real supply dealer, who must himself be an expert or have in his employ men who know electricity, projection and all the other finer mechanical points which come up and which the operator has not the time to actually take care of though he should know. This means right from the start that the theatre man must take as much care in choosing from whom he buys the goods which he finally installs as he does in picking out the goods themselves. Look out for the cut price man, for as a rule all he wants to do is to unload, and that's the end of him—absolutely no service.

FINALLY—hire the best operator obtainable. Give him the best equipment on the market and, all other things being equal, there will be no doubt about the success of your house.

Apparatus for Dissolving One Picture Into Another

Good Effect Obtained by an Alternating Current Motor Driving a Direct Current Dynamo at Low Pressure, Thus Providing the Means for Warming Up the Arc of a Second Machine While the First Is Still Running—Complete Description of "The White Light Converter"

DYNAMO-ELECTRIC alternating to direct current transforming devices, such as motor generator sets, rotary converters, etc., have always been close competitors of the rectifier which I have illustrated in this series, and many operators claim for them the advantages of better quality (whiter) light and greater freedom from interruptions in service.

The device is nothing more than an alternating current motor driving a direct current dynamo at low pressure, i. e., voltage, One important advantage of the motor-generator or the rotary-converter is the ability to provide a single machine, whose characteristics will permit of the second arc to be started and warmed up without interfering with the continuous projection of a picture, which is so desirable in those houses which successfully dissolve one picture into another.

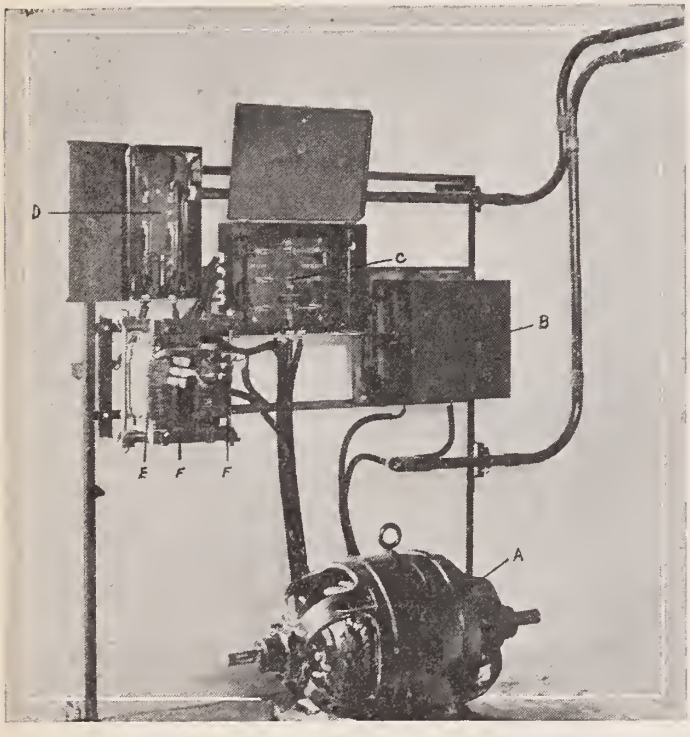

Plate "B"

When one picture is to immediately follow another on the program it becomes necessary, in order to avoid a delay of several minutes, to have a second machine ready to start at the instant the first stops.

By means of the motor-generator or rotary-converter the delay may be cut down to a few seconds. It is generally considered necessary, however, to warm up the second arc for from 3 to 5 minutes before showing the next reel, thus giving the arc time to steady itself. Moreover, in the better class of theatres, it is coming to be the accepted method of operation to "dissolve" one picture into another, thus eliminating all delay and giving a more artistic touch to the projection.

This calls for the use of ballast resistance when the second arc is struck, and while the two are operating in parallel, as well as extra switching equipment, rheostats, etc., the arrangement of which vary with different types of apparatus.

That which I shall illustrate this week, is known as the "White Light Converter," manufactured by the Wagner Electric Manufacturing Company of St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. G. V. Bain, whose acquaintance I made while in the above named city, was of great assistance to me in collecting data on the White Light Converter, which, briefly described, consists of the converter itself, a small transformer, and one or more resistances for controlling the amount of current at the arc. The transformer is of the core type, the core being constructed of specially laminated iron very securely belted to prevent any possible noise. The coils are thoroughly impregnated and are of a high overload capacity. Suitable taps are brought from the windings to provide connections that will take care of any possible variations in the line voltage. The converter consists of the usual armature and field, but with special windings for both A. C. and D. C. current. There are alternating current slip rings on one end of the armature and a direct current commutator on the other, the whole being mounted on one shaft and carried on two bronze bearings. The latter are of the usual ring oiling type, but with a very large oil reservoir. The frame is cast in one piece and is quite similar to the ordinary types of motor frames.

It will be noted from this description of the converter that it is an extremely compact machine, inasmuch as it performs the duty of both generator and motor, but unlike the motor-generator, it (the converter) has only two bearings, one shaft, one armature and one set of windings, making it extremely efficient. The resistance may be any one of three types, namely, adjustable, non-adjustable or so-called "Duplex" arc resistance which allows of the operation of two arcs from one convertor by the manipulation of but one lever.

These resistances are of the ventilated enclosed type, and are very substantially constructed and mounted upon a heavy slate base. They meet all requirements of the underwriters and fire prevention bureaus.

The Converter equipment is built for single, two or three phase circuits and for frequencies of 25, 50 and 60 cycles. Standard transformers are for a line voltage of 220, but are furnished for 110 to 550 volts. The capacities of the converters range from 25 to 100 amperes, there being four sizes. It is also possible to overload the converter far beyond its rated capacity, it being possible to pull as high as 70 amperes from a 50 ampere converter for a period of approximately three minutes, thus giving ample time and capacity to allow the operator to warm up the second arc while the first is yet in operation. As the equipment is practically noiseless it may be mounted in the operating room, unless this conflicts with local laws, when it may be installed in any part of the theatre, for as the only thing necessary for the operator to have under his control is the resistance, particularly the "Duplex" arc resistance, this can be placed in the operating room while the converter itself may be placed in a room adjoining, care being taken that this room be dry and well ventilated and that the equipment be so mounted that no damage can result from accidental contact with other objects. In installing the resistance it is advisable, where two machines are used, to have the resistance placed between the two machines where the operator can get at it without changing his position. It is not necessary to have the pole changing switch convenient, as it will only be used when starting up the converter. The position marked "starting" on the main switch is for this purpose only, and it should not be left in starting position any longer than is necessary to bring the converter to the proper speed. It should be left in running position or open.

PROBABLE SOLUTION OF A BAFFLING CARBON TROUBLE

Loren Simmons, Princess Theatre, Ottumwa, Ia.: I am a faithful reader of the News, especially the questions and answers, and certainly get a world of help from them, so in view of the fact that I am having some trouble which baffles me I am seeking your aid. I have a discoloration at my arc very often, my light stays very bright and steady for a few minutes, then it blurs (gets red) and I have to bring the carbons together sharply to again get my light bright. Have tried every kind of carbon, and am at present using 5/8 cored speer on top and 1/2 inch hard in bottom. All seem to give the same results. Am using a Cooper-Hewitt Rectifier outfit. Type A-L. 30 amperes, 60 cycles, 110 volts. Am hooked up on Nos. 3 and 5 posts, 113 volts. Have tested this for grounds or shorts, in fact, have gone over the entire system of wiring but can find nothing that is not right. Have never had this trouble while working in different theatres with a G. E. rectifier. It may seem that I do not watch my light and let the carbons burn too far apart, causing this blur, but I assure you such is not the case. The only time I am away from the machine which is running is when I am threading the other.

Answer: I am not familiar with this type of rectifier, therefore am not in a position to answer your question as well as I would like to, nevertheless I will do my best now, and in the meantime will endeavor to familiarize myself with this device and let you know what I discover. It may be that you are not getting the proper combustion with your carbons. If you have tested out as thoroughly as you say and found no trouble with any of the connections it might be advisable to try a soft carbon in the bottom jaw of your lamp for it is quite possible that the hard carbon is what is causing the sputtering. Have you examined the inside of the jaws in the lamp to see that they are perfectly clean and making good contact with the carbon, or it may be that your lamp leads have become so badly corroded that they are in danger of burning off at any minute. This condition might allow you to operate your lamp for some time, but as soon as the resistance became too great the wire would break contact or allow so little current to pass over the break that you would be unable to maintain a steady arc, the bringing together of the carbons, sharply, would again cause the wire to become fused and things would be all right for a few minutes when the entire performance would start all over again. I wish you would let me know if this latter is the solution of your trouble, for as far as I can see there is nothing the matter with your rectifier, and no matter what make of carbons you use the same trouble would be experienced unless your wires were making perfect contact and your lamp, especially the carbon jaws were kept absolutely clean.

A MYSTERIOUS "CLICK" IN A POWERS 6-B

B. Hugh Mullins, Jacksonville, Texas.—I have been a reader of your department for some time, and wish to compliment you on the help you are to operators and their problems. I am operating two Powers machines in the Park theatre here, and on the 6-B machine I have quite a "click." I have examined the intermittent closely and find that the noise is not there. In fact, I cannot locate just where it is, but it seems to be between the intermittent sprocket and the lower loop. The noise does not seem to harm the machine, but I would like to have the machine run as smooth as possible. Frankly, I am "up a tree" and if you can help me I would appreciate it very much. Wishing you continued success and thanking you in advance for any help you may be to me.

Answer: In your first and last paragraphs I was not sure whether it was sarcasm or that you really meant it. I am not egotistical, but if I have been of some assistance to the operator I feel that my efforts have not been in vain, and I thank you for your kind words of appreciation. As to the "click" you mention, it seems to me that the screws that hold the intermittent bushings in place may have become loose, allowing the shaft to become misplaced, which might throw the star too tightly against the cam, which would cause the clicking sound. Have you felt of the cover for the intermittent movement to see that there is no vibration there that might cause the click? Frankly, you have me, too, unless it is possible that the small rollers on the lower film scraper are too close together, preventing the film from following its regular path. If it is, take a light machinist's hammer, and placing a block of wood against each roller in turn, tap gently until there is sufficient room for the film to rest between the rollers. If this does not eliminate the "clicking" write me again, setting forth the nature of the click, and tell me whether there is any unsteadiness of the picture upon the screen, and I may be able to advise you more clearly.

SATISFACTORY MOTIOGRAPH PROJECTION

E. B. HENDRICK, Franklinville, N. Y., writes: Can I get a satisfactory picture with a Motiograph projector, on a good screen, without a motor generator set; 75 foot throw, picture 11 feet wide, using 60 cycle A. C. 110 volt current?

Answer: There is no reason in the world why you should not. The improvements that have been made in the late model Motiographs have succeeded in bringing that make machine to the fore, and with a good operator, which is necessary with any make machine, you will find that the Motiograph will give satisfactory service.

Of course, you can get good results without a motor-generator set, but better results could be obtained with one, or for that matter, with a rectifier. The saving to you in current bills would soon pay the initial cost of the outfit, for you must remember that double the amperage is required for alternating current than that for direct. But if you are planning to install a reflecting type screen, as I take it you are, you will be able to get very good illumination on the screen with 60 amperes of current, using 3/4 inch cored carbons top and bottom.

May all success attend you in your undertaking, and do not hesitate to call upon me at any time you think I can be of assistance to you.

METHOD OF OBTAINING BETTER LIGHT

C. Plambeck, Dorchester, Iowa, writes a letter asking for advice as to how to secure a better light. He is operating an engine driven generator, supplying light for commercial purposes as well as for operating his projection machine. Also wants to know if it will make any difference which wire goes through the rheostat.

Answer.—From a careful reading of your letter I have come to the conclusion that your generator is heavily overloaded, and the only remedy I can suggest would be to install any one of the various types of generators advertised in these columns, which are made by manufacturers, who have designed them for motion picture work exclusively, and which will allow you to increase your amperage to the rated capacity of the machine. As to the rheostat connection, it is generally connected to the positive wire as the current is supposed to flow along that wire and return to the generator by way of the negative wire. I could never see where it made any great difference, but the above is now the accepted way of doing it.

In the illustrations, Plate A shows the convertor disassembled, the numbered parts being as follows: 1, frame; 1-A, starter, or field windings; 2-2, end plates; 3, armature; 4, armature shaft; 5, slip rings; 6, ventilating fans; 7, commutator for D. C.; 8-8, main bearings; 9, slip ring or A. C. brushes; 10, D. C. brush holders and brushes; 11, leads for D. C.; 12, leads for A. C. or slip ring brushes.

Plate B shows the equipment in place and in readiness to operate. A is the converter; B, resistance; (the resistance in this illustration being of the nonadjustable type). C, main switch three pole in enclosed cabinet; D, pole reversing switch, also exposed; this switch is, I believe, to be furnished by the customer. E, transformer; F-F, taps or terminals, which allow the operator to make such connections as will enable him to raise or lower the A. C. supply voltage of the converter.

The wiring diagrams for the various types differ, but as the proper diagrams are furnished for each machine, the operator should have no difficulty in setting it up. In order to understand the use of the apparatus described herein, the operation of the converter is described as follows:

Alternating current enters the transformer at line voltage and is stepped down to approximately 50 volts, and at this voltage enters the converter on the slip ring side. In the converter it is changed into direct current and at the same time the voltage is raised to about 70. At this voltage it passes through the ballast resistance, where it is again cut down to 40 or 50 volts which is the amount necessary at the arc.

The White Light Converter carries the same guarantee that is given with all the products of the Wagner people, namely, one year against defects of any kind either in material or workmanship.

The converter has been on the market for a considerable length of time, but owing to the oversold conditions and the inability of securing some of the metals which enter into its construction, due to the European war, it is only recently that they have made any attempt to push the sale of it. Exhibitors who are using this type of converter have only words of praise for it, and from the various demonstrations I have witnessed there is little doubt in my mind but what the claims made by the manufacturer are underrated.

BAIRD MACHINES INSTALLED IN NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, THEATRE

ONE of the most up-to-date moving picture operating rooms in the city of Nashville, Tenn., is that of the Knickerbocker theatre, which boasts of having complete equipment.

The new equipment consists of two latest model Baird projectors which have just been installed in the above named theatre. These machines are the largest ever seen in the city of Nashville, and have caused much comment from those who have been fortunate enough to see the machines in actual operation. One of the features of this machine that appeals to Manager Wassman, is that they are able to carry 3,000 feet of film at one time, thereby eliminating the necessity for changing over to the other machine so many times during the showing of a five or six reel feature.

BING'S HOME ENTERTAINER

Here's a little machine, simple in its construction, and easy of operation, for which there is a place in every home.

It projects motion picture film as perfectly in the home as is possible in the average theater.

Light is provided by a baby arc, supplied with current from the ordinary electric light socket, controlled through a special rheostat.

The baby arc develops 800 candle power, with about six amperes of current. The rheostat supplied is suitable for 110, 150 or 220 volts.

Pictures projected are about 6 x 8 feet in size and splendid results are possible with a throw up to twenty-five feet.

Standard size film is used, making every film exchange in the country a constant source of supply for subjects. Reel boxes are of 1,000 feet capacity.

Set up and ready for use, the machine measures 31 inches long, 31 inches high, and 10 inches broad. The lamphouse is 10 x 6. Weight of machine, complete with arc and rheostat is 24 pounds. Packed for shipment, the weight is 55 pounds.

There is absolutely no fire risk—"Safety First" has been the watchword in construction

Camera Department, and desire to emphasize the fact that the Maxwell Color Sensation Curves must be taken into consideration when preparing the filters used in photographing or projecting film pictures in natural colors.

WITH the fundamental principles of light and color and their characteristic actions in the photographic processes established, we will next consider the various attempts which have been made to record colors photographically, commenting as we go along on the competency of the various methods when applied to cinematography.

In reviewing the history of color photography, we find that many of the historic pioneers of ordinary photography also gave consideration to the photographic reproduction of color.

Seebeck's Experiments with Silver Chloride

The earliest investigator whose results have been recorded in detail was T. J. Seebeck of Jena, Germany, who in 1810 endeavored to reproduce the colors of the solar spectrum cast by a prism upon paper coated with silver subchloride. Seebeck was successful in reproducing some colors, the red recording upon his chloride coated paper, the green being absent, and the violet region of the spectrum appearing brown and blue. Goethe in his "Farbenlehre" gives a full account of Seebeck's experiments, which were not without their significance as was proven by later investigations.

J. Nicephore Nièpce, a Frenchman and the discoverer of the Bitumen process of photography (which is one of the earliest photographic processes) observed color effects in 1829 in some of his early photographs made on glass and metal plates coated with a thin film of Bitumen (Syrian asphalt). These findings of Nièpce were not made known, however, until after he formed his partnership with Daguerre, many years later.

In 1840 Sir John Herschel, a noted English philosopher, described the spectrum colors he had obtained on silver chloride paper in a communication to the Royal Society. Herschel at that time predicted future advances in color photography.

Becquerel's Results on Silver Plates

Better results than any of the preceding investigators were secured, however, by a French scientist, Edmund Becquerel in 1848. Becquerel also sought to record the colors of the spectrum, but his methods differed from those of his predecessors. He used silver plates which he chlorinized by plunging them into chlorine water. He later prepared his plates by connecting them to the copper pole of a galvanic battery and immersing them in hydrochloric acid. In this way he was able to secure a coating of any desired thickness. Becquerel's plates gave a good rendition of all colors except the green, which was rather poorly recorded.

Experiments with chlorinized silver plates (similar to Becquerel's) were commenced in 1841 by Nièpce de St. Victor (a nephew of Nicephore Nièpce) who exhibited some specimens of natural color photography in Paris some years later.

It should be noted here that all of these color effects produced on surfaces coated with silver chloride were secured after the chloride had been previously darkened by exposure to light. It is hardly necessary to state that the colors so recorded were in no instance permanent, disappearing finally on continued exposure to light. Alphonse Louis Poitevin, another French worker, finally succeeded in fixing (rendering permanent) these colored images by the use of sulphuric acid.

Music and the Picture

Methods for Synchronization of Short Cut Backs

"EACH week I read with great interest your articles on correct music for the picture, and have derived great benefit from them," writes Eugene H. Cloude of Columbus, Ga. "I have had about four years' experience playing the pictures, and in that time I have made as careful a study of correct picture music as the conditions have allowed me. I have played with some good leaders as well as poor ones, and have noticed carefully their methods in selecting a program, of course there is always something in each man's program that every musician will not consider correct.

"I will be the leader of my first orchestra in the near future, and there are some few questions I would be glad if you would answer for me. For instance, should the action on the screen call for a lento movement, and the scene suddenly "cut back" to a dancing scene of only a few seconds duration, what is the leader to do, and what is the best way to do it? Or should the screen action change to the frivolous while you are in the midst of an andante strain, what is the best way for him to lead his musicians to a finale without butchering the number he is already playing? How can I properly synchronize the picture without timing the reel to a certain extent, you give reasons for this being wrong, but it is a little vague, will you explain this more fully to me? I have inclosed an addressed and stamped envelope for an answer if you willl be so kind."

Letter from Eugene H. Cloude

The above letter from Eugene H. Cloude, the musical director of the Springer Theatre, while written to us for personal reply nevertheless asks questions which are important to all picture players, and I consequently take the liberty of using the letter as subject matter for an editorial.

If we had more musical directors inclined toward success as I know the writer of the above to be, MUSIC and the PICTURE would suffer less musically. Before answering Mr. Cloude's few questions I want him to know that we wish him every success and that he can feel assured of our assistance at all times. While it is not our desire to be vain, nevertheless we have helped many, both privately and publicly, and we shall continue to do so. The aim of our department is to assist in everything that will create good picture music.

As you are now about to become a director of your own orchestra, remember one thing first, last and always. Your orchestra must at all times interpret your own emotional, dramatic or picture ideas. Two heads cannot lead one orchestra. Your success as a musical director in a picture theatre depends more on your personality and originality in musical interpretation and every old-timer and well routined musician will tell you that there dare not be conflicting opinions if music is to be well rendered. This holds good in playing to pictures. You should endeavor at all times to allow the screen to suggest to your imagination that which will synchronize. Always remember that an imaginative instinct is necessary to all interested in the setting of musical programs to synchronize with the picture. An extensive knowledge of musical compositions and their worth in picture playing is necessarily the first and most important factor. Without a continued research for new music of value to picture playing, it will soon become difficult to arouse an imaginative musical inspiration.

Your first question requires more than one answer. For instance, had you been playing a dance scene of short duration prior to the scene which requires a lento movement, you could cut the lento movement and continue playing your dance number very softly during that sugggestion bringing it back fortissimo when the "cutback" to the dancing scene is shown. This answer is only good when the scenes in question are so short that they do not permit the playing of a number half decently. Again if the scene requiring the lento movement is of some length before the "cutback" to the dancing scene is flashed and the "cutback" is very short, as you say, I should not suggest that the musical number being played should be destroyed. Many directors of photoplays have a habit of flashing irrrelevant so-called big scenes. For such scenes as you describe here I have composed and arranged a musical number known as "A B C Dramatic Music No. 15." This number contains five separate numbers, all of which have been set together for the purpose of surmounting just such difficulties as you mention in your letter. If the scenes are so short that you can't follow them with this number, there is only one remaining thing to do and that is ignore that action which is of the least importance to the psychological thought which the picture screen is trying to portray.

Your second question regarding the frivolous and the andante strain will also be explained to you by a study of the above dramatic music. The above answers this same question.

There are many methods of leading your musicians from one number into the other without necessarily butchering the number you are already playing. The first, which is more popularly used but which I do not consider the best, is to let your music quickly die down to a great pianissimo and then quietly make your segue into the next number. The second, one that I have used to great advantage, was to play each number to such a chord which is what we term a "'proper resolution" in music and stop the orchestra at this point. To do this you must not use your picture cues too literally, which is only necessary at a few points in the picture. Another method which is very good, but which will take time, is to train the men under your direction to modulate with you to a relative tonic chord at a given signal from you. Another method is the simultaneous and abrupt stop which should only be used during the rendition of melodramatic numbers. Abrupt segues are very seldom essential. The thorough picture leader should acquaint himself with all four of these methods and use the one which is the most advantageous at the proper time..

The Timing of the Reel

The timing of reels is of great advantage in selecting your musical program, but is very misleading when you try to time a scene or series of scenes to the second, or ten seconds, or twenty seconds. It has the tendency of making you try to get somewhere in a musical number and you neglect to keep yourself ready to break off your number clean. The first thought of every picture leader should be of how, where and at how many places he can decently stop the number he is playing. When you know that, you do not need to worry whether you must play the number half through or twice through. Each reel of pictures should be timed only to get the approximate time consumed by projection from one cue point to another. This will not help you in playing with the picture but willl assist you when selecting your musical program to select numbers of such length that you will not need to make ridiculous repetitions or select such numbers as will make it necessary for you to make poor finales. It is a poor policy to confine yourself to a too exact time and in the long run it is very nerve racking as there is no means to be depended upon whereby we can hope to get positive and exact projection. You will find the time designated in many of my plots by X, which is only timed down to the one-half minute. This does not mean that it is really correct within one half minute, but when you find XXX after a certain number it means that you should select a number which would play 4½ to 5 minutes without being tiresome. When you find no X you know that the numher will be very short. Conse-

Note.—In music plots each reel of film is divided into 10 units of time, each unit denoted by one X representing about 1½ minutes. Consequently when a number is designated by XX it plays about 3 minutes, XXXX about 6 minutes, etc. When no X appears after musical description it means that the number is very short and does not play a minute or more. When cues to stop numbers are in quotation, "——," it means that the cue is reading matter or sub-title. All other cues are action on screen. All segues should be made quietly and clean. When quick segues or abrupt stops are necessary it will be mentioned in Cues or Notes. When the time of each 1,000 ft. of film is less than 15 minutes there will appear less than 10 X's in each reel. To get the correct time of projection for each reel, multiply the number of X's appearing in each reel by 1½.

Music Notes.—This picture affords excellent opportunities for a good rendition of your musical program, the numbers all playing quite some length of time. No. 1 should be a light 2-4 number of frivolous temperament. No. 2 should be a medium slow number of romantic appeal. Legato movements should be predominant. Nos. 3, 4, 14, 19 and 22 are short melodramatic numbers as suggested in plot. No. 5 should be a concert waltz with a slow introduction of pathetic appeal. No. 6 must be a medium slow number of romantic appeal and a slight dramatic effect. No. 7 should be a very slow number of a positive pathetic appeal and a decided dramatic effect. No. 8 should be a slow waltz lento movement with legato strains predominant. No. 9 is similar to 7. No. 10 should be a slow melodious number of pathetic appeal. This number does not need to be of dramatic effect. No. 11 should be a medium lively number of intermezzo style. No. 12 should be a ballad. It accompanies singing on the screen. At the end of the singing the number can be finished if played very softly. Nos. 13 and 15 are similar to 7. No. 16 is similar to 5. No. 17 is similar to 7. No. 18 must be a very slow number with a decided dramatic effect. It should not be a sweet or melodious number, the dramatic effect being the more important. No. 20 is similar to 10. No. 21 is a light 2-4 number. The organ can be very appropriately used throughout this entire picture.

Five Picture Theatres in San Diego, California

The Plaza and the Cabrillo, Located Next Door to Each Other, Are Like the Siamese Twins, from Their Proximity and Management Under One Head—The Theatres Face a Magnificent Park, Lined with Huge Palms—Other Three Houses Have Many Points of Appeal

FIVE representative theatres in San Diego, Cal., are the Plaza, the Cabrillo, the Broadway, the Superba and the Pickwick. The first two are "twin theatres," located right next door to each other. They are owned by the Plaza Amusement Company. The Plaza measures fifty by one hundred feet, and was built about three years ago, of concrete, steel and wood. It faces a striking municipal fountain in a magnificent city square. Tropical palms cast their shade on the frequenters of the park, but fail, however, with all their suggestion of coolness to compete with the comfortable interiors of the Plaza and the Cabrillo, offering right across the way inducements for the people to come in and be amused while forgetting the beating sun outside.

The ventilating is done with straight exhaust fans. The Plaza is heated, too, strange as it may seem to those living in colder climates. While the mercury gets pretty high during the day in the southern part of California, it takes a quick tumble after sundown, and the sudden chilliness makes a little heat very acceptable. Hence the Plaza has a steam heating plant for the comfort of its patrons. The seating capacity of the house is five hundred on the main floor, with three hundred in the balcony. The booth is equipped with two Power's 6-A machines, which throw the pictures on an aluminum or silver leaf cloth screen.

The general interior decoration consists of tan and gold. A Photoplayer is the musical instrument in use at the Plaza. In the lobby, ten by twenty feet, there is an effective program board for making known the pictures on the current bill. An automatic ticket selling machine has been installed in the booth. The shows are continuous from 10 a.m. until 10.30 at night. Five and six reels are run off for each performance, and the admission charge is ten cents for matinees; the same price prevails in the evening. The Plaza is located in the heart of the business district, and employs twelve people. Newspapers and billboards constitute the advertising methods of the management. Very elaborate electrical effects make the front of the Plaza a spot of blazing light after dark.

The Cabrillo, the friendly competitor next door, is also characterized by a magnificent display of electric illumination in front. Not only does the management believe in attracting notice to the theatre by a blaze of light, but it makes a strong appeal to the ear in the form of cathedral chimes in the lobby. Nobody misses this—except deaf persons, but they cannot escape the intention of the manager to get them inside, for there is the light-flooded lobby refusing to be ignored. So really the only people passing not marked as possible patrons are the unfortunate afflicted with loss of sight and hearing at the same time.

The Cabrillo is a nine hundred seat house—six hundred chairs on the main floor and three hundred in the balcony. The theatre was erected two years ago and is located on a plot fifty by one hundred feet. The ventilating is conducted by a Buffalo Forge system. The seats were put in by the Wisconsin Seating Company. Two Power's 6-A projectors are in the booth, the length of throw is eighty-one feet, and the pictures are shown on a plaster and zinc screen. The decorations of the interior are in tan and blue.

Lobby advertising is made effective by the use of an illuminated brass and art glass program board. The lobby measures ten by twenty feet. An automatic ticket seller has been put in the lobby booth. A continuous performance begins at 1.00 p. m., with a six reel show offered at ten and twenty cents in the afternoons; the admission prices remain the same in the evenings. Fifteen people are necessary to keep the Cabrillo in smooth working order.

Fox, V-L-S-E and General Film have been furnishing the pictures at this theatre. Like the Plaza, the Cabrillo attractions are advertised in the daily papers and on billboards in conspicuous locations.

The Broadway is another San Diego house catering to the public by up-to-date methods and showing worth-while pictures. It uses Paramount and Pathe films and runs six hours a day, charging ten and twenty cents in the daytime and raising some of the seats to thirty cents in the evening. Besides using newspapers and billboards for the advertising of current and coming attractions, the management drives through the streets an auto with transparencies when making known the showing of an unusual feature. A National cash register and ticket printer facilitates the sale of tickets. The lobby, twenty by thirty feet, is made the center of attraction by displays of striking paper and photographs of well-known players. The house seats 930 people. An Erneman machine throws the pictures on a plaster screen ninety-six feet away.

The Superba Is Another San Diego Theatre of Importance

The Superba, controlled by the Broadway Amusement Company and built in 1911, is a cement structure, eighty by eighty feet, and seats 916 on the main floor; there is no balcony. An exhaust fan and a system for "washing the air" keeps the Superba ventilation in perfect condition. A furnace heats the theatre and indirect lighting illuminates the auditorium. The throw is seventy-eight feet. A Power's and a Simplex machine constitute the "machinery" in the projection booth; the screen is canvas. A Peerless Photoplayer furnishes the music for the picture in the Superba. A National cash register and ticket printing machine is in the ticket booth. Five shows a day are given at an admission price of ten cents in the afternoon and ten and twenty cents in the evening. The theatre is located in the business section and uses Triangle service. The newspapers and billboards are made use of freely for advertising the pictures shown at the Superba.

The last of the five, but not the least, if for no other reason than its Dickens' name, the Pickwick, 1035 Fourth street, draws tions on color and photography, also commenced his experiments in color photography at about this period.

In 1868 Dr. Wm. Zenker of Berlin, Germany, published an article of considerable significance, comparing the results obtained by Seebeck (with silver chloride paper) and Becquerel (with chlorinized silver plates). Zenker showed that the colors secured by Seebeck on paper were purely pigmentary in nature, whereas, he claimed that the color effects secured by Becquerel were only partly pigmentary in nature and were largely due to interference or the action of standing waves—produced in the chloride coating by light reflected from the silver plate back of the coating. Thus Zenker foreshadowed the world famous Lippman process of producing photographs in natural colors, which we shall describe presently.

Du Hauron Outlines 3 Color Process

The year 1869 is symbolized by the publication of a book—"Les Coleurs en Photographie"—by Marion and Company of Paris. The author of this book was Louis Ducos du Hauron who has been mentioned before in the Camera Department as the originator of the Anaglyph—a system of producing pictures in stereoscopic relief. Du Hauron in this book described two important processes of natural color photography which subsequently materialized, namely—the process of making three negatives, through red, green and blue-violet filters and superimposing prints stained in the complementary colors, and also the so-called "screen plate" process, which consists of making a negative (on a color sensitive plate course) through a ruled or mosaic screen having on its surface lines or dots of the three primary colors. We will consider these processes in detail at the proper time, it being only necessary to state here that Louis Ducos du Hauron was a pioneer in color photography, as we know it today, and made this subject his profound study for many years. ,

The next important investigations with regard to the photographic recording of color were those of Matthew Carey Lea, an American residing in Philadelphia, Pa. In 1887 Carey Lea made public the results of an extensive series of experiments on the haloid salts of silver. The silver haloids (or halides) as is generally known, are the chloride, bromide and iodide of silver.

Lea's experiments showed that these salts were capable of assuming most all colors of the spectrum, but the red chloride of silver seemed the most promising. Lea considered that there were great possibilities for color rendition in these silver compounds, which he termed the "photo salts."

In view of the experiments along this line, which have gone before, it appears to us that here really lies a fruitful field for research, the latent possibilities of which may yet be made to score in the production of natural color pictures. The problem of producing color in the silver haloids has been attacked by at least one motion picture concern, but not exactly after the manner of Carey Lea's suggestions.

Efforts to Color Silver in Film Positives

The efforts so far made to alter the color of the residual silver in a motion picture film have not been directed toward producing color by the action of light, but by combining dyes (said to be of the aniline group) with the silver bromide during the developing operation.

To those chemically inclined, it will be readily apparent that many colors, and combinations of colors, could be effected by causing various chemicals to combine with, or react upon, the silver contained in the emulsion of a motion picture film positive. With regard to such processes we have one comment to make, the justice of which we believe will be conceded by all readers. So long as the silver structure remains (as in a toned print) the film images will always be more or less opaque. This opacity amounts to an admixture of black to the colors produced, so that they could never, therefore, be really pure colors. In making this legitimate comment we by no means wish to discourage those working on such processes, as some results along this line which we have seen are, indeed, very promising.

Lippman's Interference Process

Following the interesting and valuable researches of Carey Lea, came the announcement by Professor Gabriel Lippman, in 1891, of a process whereby actual and permanent photographs in quently you must select a number which you can stop easily and quickly.

MUSIC METHODS

In plots such as appear in this department, when there is no "cue to stop number" given, it gives you the opportunity for using numbers that should be played concert style. At fifty per cent. of the points given in all music plots whereat to stop the number you are playing, it is not necessary that you make immediate stops and everyone plotting a picture must depend to a certain extent upon the intelligence of the musician playing the picture. The cue points must, however, be given so as to make it impossible for the musician to lose himself in the picture and consequently be ready to play the important number at the important point when good synchronization will allow for nothing else. If this is true, isn't it ridiculous that we set ourselves the task of accurately timing a picture? Don't forget that it is important for a leader above all things to know when, where, and how a certain number can be stopped, not how the picture will stop the number.

FIVE SAN DIEGO THEATRES

its patrons with runs of World and Pathe features. It not only has a Photoplayer but an orchestra, from the conviction of the management that too much attention cannot be directed to the musical part of the entertainment. Newman's brass frames act as a magnet in the lobby for the pictures running inside or those booked for the following days. Six shows are given every day at an admission of ten cents for both afternoon and night.

The Pickwick is located on a business street. It gets patronage through the newspapers, billboard service and advertising in railroad periodicals. The Zahn Corporation controls the house, built about 1906. The theatre measures forty by one hundred and twenty feet, and is ventilated by a rotary exhaust and distributing fans. Gas radiators make up the heating equipment. Two Power's 6-A projectors show the pictures on an emulsion screen. The Pickwick seats five hundred in the auditorium and three hundred in the balcony. The length of the throw is seventy-five feet. Frescoes decorate the walls and ceiling, and velvet hangings and velvet carpets convey a richness of effect to the interior.

MANY CHANGES AMONG ONTARIO THEATRE MEN

WORD has been received in Toronto that Mr. Bernstein of the Globe theatre, Montreal, has left for New York, Mr. Barney Jacobs taking his place at the head of the active management of this popular playhouse.

There have been several changes of note in Ontario during the past couple of weeks among the theatre men. Mr. Ralph Gribble has returned from St. Catherines to resume the management of his own house in New Hamburg. Mr. Gribble, who found a wife in St. Catherines, announces that he will continue his popular music classes in addition to his theatrical duties. Mr. Walter Liscombe for many years a prominent exhibitor in Toronto, who returned from California a short time ago, has taken over the Bloor Palace theatre, and will work out many of the ideas obtained during his long trip. The new theatre which was previously announced as opening in the east end of Toronto, it is understood, will be in charge of Mr. Richards, who promises the people a program worthy of the fine house just being completed.

The Mining and Smelting Company, Deloro, Ontario, is conducting a special moving picture program in that town for the benefit of the employees of the company and their friends. Universal program is being used.

MISSOURI THEATRE TO BE EXTENSIVELY ALTERED AND IMPROVED

THE Electric theatre, Sixth and Minnesota avenue, Kansas City, Kan., is undergoing remodeling, and a stucco front will be added before the work is done. Then, the price of admission will be increased. The house has always run at 5 cents; it will hereafter charge 10 cents on Saturday, Sunday and holidays, though the 5 cent price will remain on the other days, and for children every day.

natural colors could be produced. Lippman communicated the details of his process to the French Academy of Sciences in that year. Lippman's researches (along the lines suggested by Zenker in 1868) were directed toward the production of photographic results in color by interference, and he called the results "interference heliochromes."

While the Lippman process is in no way applicable to cinematography, a description of its underlying principles will prove of value here, because in addition to the fact that "interference" is a physical phenomenon by which many of the colors of Nature are produced, some of the most accurate tests in photographic optical work (the polishing of lenses and the selection and surfacing of glass for light filters) are accomplished by the observation of interference bands or colors.

The Lippman process of Interference Heliochromy will be best understood by reference to the diagram, Fig. 10.

Making Interference Heliochrome

In Fig. 10 P is a glass plate coated with a perfectly transparent bromide emulsion sensitized for all colors and having its silver particles in an extremely fine state of division (much finer than in an ordinary plate). Such a coated and sensitized plate is placed, with the glass side towards the lens, in a special plate holder having a reservoir at the back. This reservoir is next filled with clean dry mercury, the mercury being introduced so that it comes into direct contact with the emulsion side of the plate, forming a reflecting mirror as indicated by M, Fig. 10. In Fig. 10 the thickness of the emulsion between the glass P and the mercury M is shown greatly exaggerated.

Light rays from the lens falling upon the glass plate P and traversing the emulsion are reflected back by the mercury M. The path of the incident light waves are shown by the solid wavy lines in Fig. 10, while the reflected light waves are shown by the dotted wavy lines.

By a study of Fig. 10 it will now be seen that the reflected waves come together, or interfere, with the incident waves at periodic intervals. Thus stationary or standing waves are formed within the transparent sensitive emulsion. At the points where the waves come together (or interfere) the light is extinguished, but at intervals of half a wave length (of the incident light) between the points of interference, exposure takes place, forming a series of fine lines or laminae within the structure (or thickness) of the emulsion. These points at which exposure takes place are indicated by the shaded portions in the center of the loops in Fig. 10.

It will furthermore be deduced that these exposed lines must be closer together and more numerous for light of short wave lengths than for light of long wave lengths. We have, therefore, in preparing the diagram, shown sets of waves for red, green and blue light respectively.

What a Heliochrome Looks Like

B, Fig. 10, serves to show that there is a loss of one-half a wave length of the incident light when reflection takes place at the mercury mirror. The causes for this need not be dwelt upon here.

Now as to the actual appearance of a developed fixed and dried interference heliochrome. In order that the readers who have never seen one of these results may be under no misapprehension we will state that the exposed lines or laminae are not side by side upon the surface of the plate but are situated (side by side) in the structure of the transparent emulsion—between its outer surface and the glass plate.

When one of these interference photographs (a transparency of course) is looked through, only a brownish color is seen, but when the plate is viewed at an angle (by reflected light), the objects photographed are seen in their true natural colors.

When it is considered how infinitesimal a wave-length of light is, and when it is realized that there are within the emulsion film of an interference photograph many exposed lines separated by a distance of only half a wave-length, it will be appreciated that an interference heliochrome is really one of the wonders of science.

Cooper Hewitt Electric Co.,
Hoboken, N. J.

Gentlemen:-

Good photography is dependent on lighting, and the employment of the best lighting system in a studio is the biggest essential in the making of a good picture. For that reason I consider Cooper Hewitt Lights absolutely indispensible.

In making "The Common Law" for Miss Clara Kimball Young I insisted upon Cooper Hewitt Lights because of the vastly superior photography made possible by them.

When you add the fact that they are cool to work with and easy on the eyes I do not hesitate to say that I could not get along without them.

Wishing you continued success,

Yours sincerely,

AC/R

Five Reasons Why Cooper Hewitts Are Best

Because:

I. They possess high actinic value—the peculiar rays of light indispensable to the best photography.

II. The light is soft and perfectly diffused, penetrating every corner, giving fine modeling, and blends well with and resembles daylight lighting.

III. They are cool, and safe for the eyes. They have no glare; no heat.

IV. They are an absolutely steady light. There is no flicker. They do not drop out in the middle of a set. They do not have to be trimmed.

V. They are cheap to operate—low in current consumption—low in maintenance, and produces wonderful photography.

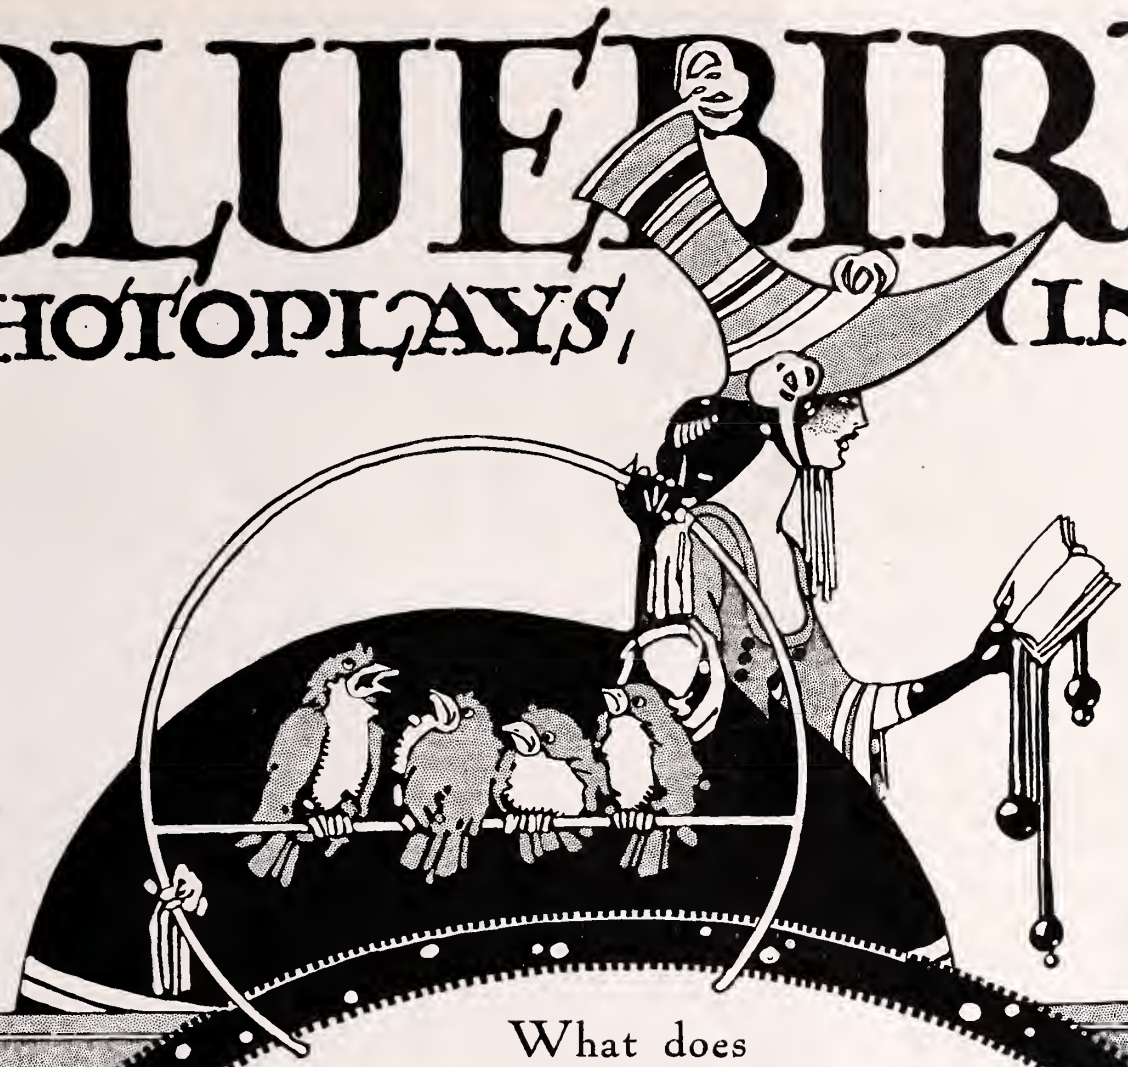
BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, (INC.)



What does This Name Signify?

IT signifies the best plays we can buy, produced by the players best fitted to portray the characters. The best way to hold the public is to please the public. If we keep on pleasing the public, it will get in to the habit of coming where our plays are shown. And the only way to please the public is to produce good plays. The question of the cast must be decided after we read the play and find out what kind of actors we need. The best way not to please the public is to buy the actor and make the play fit him. We can't pin our faith to the actor because the actor is migratory and uncertain. He can't play every part written and play it well. He is too human. Therefore if we follow rigidly the rule of buying the good play and casting it with people who fit the roles best, we are giving the public the very thing it goes to the theatre to see and we are making money permanently. That is the real meaning of BLUEBIRD. It means to the photo play what the high class Standard Brand means in any commodity. It means sure and permanent quality. What more can the play-goers ask?

We have been telling this policy to millions of people thru the medium of half page ads in the Saturday Evening Post. At a single stroke therefore, we are giving Exhibitors the supreme opportunity for profits and prestige by producing the supremely artistic in screen dramas backed by the largest advertising campaign in the history of the industry.

Millions of people are seeing BLUEBIRD Photo Plays and the attendance is growing daily in all theatres showing BLUEBIRDS. When are you going to join the prosperity crowd?

NAPOLEON AND SALLY, THE ONLY CHIMPANZEES IN MOTION PICTURES HAVE ROMPED THROUGH FORTY E. & R. COMEDIES

"Napoleon at St. Helena"

THIS was to be an interview.

On the day the writer called at the E. & R. Jungle Film Company's studio to meet the leading players, the two principal ones were in an exceptionally temperamental mood—way up stage, so to speak—and refused to so much as utter an understandable syllable. Had they been so disposed they could not have made themselves understood, because their language is spoken only in the jungles of Central Africa where Napoleon and Sally, the only chimpanzees in motion pictures, were born.

Napoleon, the comedian extraordinary, playing in motion pictures made by the E. & R. Company, came to the United States about six years ago. From the first he was considered the brightest of his race to come to this land. Today he is spoken of by Professor Richard Garner, a most able student of anthropology, late of the Zoological Society of New York, and who has spent twenty-three years in the jungles of Africa, as the most intelligent ape that has ever been captured and trained.

Originally, Napoleon went into vaudeville in an act in which Little Hip, an elephant, was the principal, but the chimpanzee soon learned the ways of the stage, and in less than six weeks had "stolen the act." At first he did his roller skating stunt, then he learned to ride a bicycle, was taught table manners, and took dinner with the elephant and the trainer on the stage. He developed a liking for the horizontal bars, and became an expert on eight-foot stilts and an eight-foot frame bicycle. He trouped for five years over the "big time" vaudeville circuits of the country. While on the tour through Australia, the elephant was taken ill and died. For several weeks Napoleon was heartbroken, and it was necessary to bring him back to America.

Back in America he went to work with a will, and learned new stunts, including the driving of a specially constructed automobile which he can "jaz" and put in working order himself.

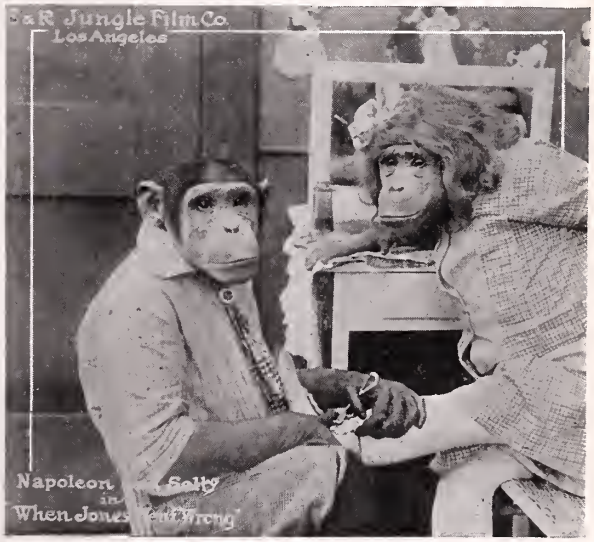
On Christmas Day of 1913, Napoleon was publicly married, the wedding taking place on the stage at the Pantages theatre, Los Angeles, in the presence of 2,000 people, the bevailed bride being Sally, his mate of the E. & R. Jungle Zoo.

Sally is of an absolutely different nature from Napoleon, and dislikes company very much. She is a little "homey" woman, taken up with her affairs of looking after the domicile, a palm leaf hut at the zoo. Since first coming here, Sally has shown a liking for children. Three years ago when a baby was born in the household of the caretaker, she immediately became the nurse, and has continued in that capacity almost ever since. She is an excellent washerwoman, and keeps her kitchen as neat as a pin.

Napoleon and Sally have played in more than forty motion picture subjects, in all of which they have been featured. The first of these releases were made early this year, and include "Haunted," "Aunt Hepsey's Heir," "Teacher's Pet," "Jungle Brats," "Discovered," "When the Clock Went Cukoo," "When Jones Went Wrong," "Nap's Night Out," "Perils of the Beach," and others equally as good. Most recently they have been working in a series of comedies which are shortly to be released. Some of the individual comedies in this series are "Film Fairies," "Their First Flivver," "As Others See Us," "Stopping the Bullets," all of one reel, and "Napoleon and Sally Desert the Army," which is in two reels.

While Napoleon and Sally are the leading players at the E. & R. Jungle Film studio, Messrs. J. S. Edwards and John Rounan, the owners, known the world over as the greatest collectors of rare animals, have a very large variety of such specimens, every one of which has taken part in the making of motion pictures. The collection includes lions, pumas, educated leopards, forty-five monkeys consisting of twenty-three varieties, including "John D," the only white monkey in captivity; armadillos, elephants, Cuban tree rats, regal black and royal pythons, Alaskan martens, arown pigeons; the only Brazillian capabara in America; Colby's Vulture; enus and a Tasmanian devil; and "Congo," the West African uncivilized man, who, scientists say, is a representative of the connecting link between monkeys and human beings.

The E. & R. has a very successful organization for the making of one and two-reel comedies, or even larger subjects. The comedies are released through independent exchanges in every part of the country.



Nap knows how to hook Sally's dress, too.

Eighteen Reasons—Count 'Em!

The Motion Picture News is the most widely read periodical in the trade. Following are the reasons for this and why every one else connected with the trade should be a regular reader:

1. Facts—Not Promises

It is the only way an exhibitor can get unprejudiced advance information in an industry in which advance "dope" is absolutely necessary to getting the jump on the other fellow. No one connected with The News has any financial interest in any film.

You never will find a statement in the Motion Picture News which has not been edited to the facts. When necessary to reprint another's statement, The News uses quotation marks and even then cuts out the adjectives (hot air).

2. Editorials for Thinkers

Any man who thinkingly reads the editorials in The News, will not only have a very good idea of the prevailing weaknesses of the industry, but will find constructive suggestions which will help him to be a leader in the industry in his community, and in the industry itself.

3. Reliable Reviews

Some managers have not enough sense to get unprejudiced reviews, or are so "close" they think they can get along with free printed matter.

The Motion Picture News always reviews film absolutely in the interest of the exhibitor and of his public. A recent test, during which 6,000 postal cards were sent out, shows that the majority of the exhibitors prefer The News' reviews to those of any other publication. They are honest and reliable!

4. First to Arrive

The Motion Picture News is the first trade paper to reach its subscribers each week—a tremendous advantage especially to the exhibitor in booking, and also in publicity for his pictures. It is the only trade paper, for example, to reach the Pacific Coast within the week of its publication.

5. Release Dates Most Correct

This any exhibitor can easily prove by comparison. Release dates often are changed at the last minute, but The News catches all such changes by wire; so that, while the first out, these are further ahead than other lists. The idea of publishing exchange serial numbers in connection with the release dates originated with The News.

6. Real Up-to-date News

A man who thinks that he can get along without keeping up with the other fellow, be he producer, distributor, exhibitor or accessory dealer, will get about as far as a gold fish in a glass bowl. The reader of The News has placed before him every week the doings of the industry all over the world; this comes from its own special correspondents. You'll never find any news items in The News which are mossy enough to belong in an encyclopedia.

7. Carries Most Advertising

Producers depend mainly upon their trade paper advertising to reach the trade. The News carries more of such advertising than any other motion picture paper. Frequently this means advertising by some of the most prominent producers is exclusive in The News. Often The News has as many as 20 pages of such exclusive advertising; this is of vast business importance to the reader. In fact the advertising pages of a trade paper are equally, if not more, important than the text.

Keep a going, brother! Next page is better than this!

Why you should have the News

The Motion Picture News is for everyone connected with the industry (outsiders are not encouraged to take it. Here are more reasons, but be sure to read first those on the opposite page:

8. East and West Coast Studios

The editorial representatives of The News are keeping right in touch with the industry in Los Angeles, New York City, Chicago and every other producing center. They tell each week of what the big fellows are planning for the future, and what they are doing today; they cover the doings of the directors and the actors and all others who are prominent in the production of the new and coming film.

9. Colored Inserts of Stars

The News frequently carries colored inserts of stars. In the course of a year these make a very valuable collection.

10. Among the Exchanges

A department devoted to news about, and matters of special interest to, the local exchange man—the big link in the chain between producer and exhibitor.

11. New Laws and Decisions

This department covers all news concerning new or projected laws, Federal, State, County or Municipal, that may affect the industry.

12. Live Wire Exhibitors

The News has a department recording successful advertising and other schemes that have been tried out and produced actual results. It sifts the poor from the good and gives only the latter.

13. Accessory News

This is a section of The News devoted to the construction, equipment, and operation of theatre, exchange, and studio, and is an absolute necessity to the theatre owner and his operator, and to the up-to-date manufacturer of, and dealer in, anything which pertains to the showing of film.

14. Projection Department

Projection is the keynote of the motion picture theatre. For this reason The News is devoting considerable space each week to the problems which enter into successful projection. These discussions are intensely practical for the operator in his daily work, yet keep him in touch with all the scientific developments.

15. The Camera

This department each week is devoted to motion photography in all its phases—studio and laboratory work.

16. Building and Furnishing

An invaluable department for the live exhibitor who wants to make his house better, and for the man who is about to build or rebuild.

17. Motion Picture Music

The up-to-date exhibitor tries to have his music interpret the film. In this department are suggested proper musical illustrations for current photoplays.

18. Less Than 5 Cents a Week

Published Weekly. Subscription $2 per year, postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada, $3; Foreign, $4 per year—150 to 200 pages each issue; size 9x12 inches.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS takes pleasure in offering herewith, to the trade and to the profession, the second edition of the Motion Picture Studio Directory.

The Directory speaks for itself. The material is in it. There is little more to say.

The Motion Picture Studio Directory was the first and it still remains the one and only authoritative and complete guide to the large and interesting profession engaged in the making of the motion picture. It contains over two thousand biographies and many display pages giving correct details and interesting facts about picture people.

EXHIBITORS will find this volume, as with the previous edition, a right hand, permanent guide in preparing their copy for house programs, newspapers and for all theatre publicity. Newspaper editors, studio managers, employment agencies, libraries and professional clubs and societies will find it equally indispensable. The contents are greatly increased and the circulation largely extended over the previous issue.

This volume is put forth with a serious purpose, to fill a genuine need. To both the subscriber and advertiser it gives much more than value received. We feel confident that it will be received in the spirit with which we have issued it, as a valuable contribution to the picture profession and industry.

Dorothy Dalton, the Ince-Triangle Star, in A Trio of Poses, Illustrative of her Screen Work

DOROTHY DALTON—REVOLUTIONIST

She Wants to Play "Sweet Young Things," But Nature Can't See It That Way—And Ince Believes in Letting Nature Alone—The Girl Who Came Near to Being a Society Belle Is Now a Shining Film Star—Her Beauty Shown in a Supplement to This Issue

By Kay Anthony

AN added starter has been entered in "The Vampire Sweepstakes." A new heart-smasher has gone to the post in the struggle for supremacy among screen sorceresses. Another enchantress has been recorded on the books and though she is "on scratch," the odds against her have found an army of takers. "Watch her travel!" the wiseacres are warning. "She'll pull down those handicaps at the first turn, leap into the lead on the back stretch and breeze home a winner under wraps." Her name is Dorothy Dalton.

What Shelley did to poetry; what Raphael did to painting; what Mozart did to music—Dorothy Dalton has done to the "siren brigade" of the moving pictures. She has revolutionized it. With but a single performance—that of "Tecolote" in "The Captive God"—she has introduced to the screen a new type; one that is certain, they say, to enjoy a greater prestige among photoplay patrons than does the now popular garden variety of "vampire." She has brought to the screen a strange comingling of sensuousness and purity—a mixture that is in nowise offensive to the finer sensibilities, yet possesses those uncanny physical allurements that command riveted attention.

"A VAMPIRE," says the dictionary, "is a blood-sucking ghost; one who lives by preying on others; an extortioner." This—Miss Dalton is not. Nor, to be true, is any of those of her contemporaries who have come to be commonly referred to as "vampires." But, along with them, she is, figuratively speaking, a "vampire" in her studio activities. Yet, she is different. They constitute one class, she another. And until her advent, there had been but one class. That is why she is a revolutionist.

The asset that has brought Miss Dalton fame as a new type of "vampire" is her face. The roles in which she has appeared have assisted her in the rise. Here is not a "wickedly beautiful face"; it is just beautiful. Its remarkable adaptability to the camera may be seen by a glance at the picture which forms the supplement to this issue of Motion Picture News. Without the wickedness, without that sinister something ever present in the feminine countenance, a "vampire," the analysts claim, cannot be. Miss Dalton has repudiated this claim.

LOOKING at the Dalton face is like being held spellbound by the master creation of a master sculptor. Only when it is expressing emotion does it betray its vitality; at all other times it is as a work in white marble, delicately chiseled by tiny tools in the hand of an inspired genius.

When Ince, who himself has been termed "the Rodin of the films," first set eyes upon the face of Miss Dalton, he felt that he had seen a "find." Intent upon giving to the new art a creature such as it has never known before, he engaged her, but when she learned his motive she hesitated. Her silken black eyebrows crept together, her breathing quickened, and her ruby-red lips parted in surprise, as she quietly asked: "Aren't you going to let me play girls? I can't play women!"

But Ince had the courage of his convictions and stood firm in his intentions to provide Miss Dalton with parts of a bolder nature than that of mere girls. So he cast her in the role of "Mary Houston," the erring wife in "The Disciple" with William S. Hart. The part did not require of her to do any more "vamping" than just allowing her natural beauty to attract a man who was not her husband, and yet, so alluring, so bewitching, so entrancing was she in her delicate interpretation of the role that it was but natural for her to be regarded a "vampire."

FOLLOWING this introductory part, Miss Dalton played "The Queen" with Orrin Johnson in "D'Artagnan" and "Dorothy Haldeman" with H. B. Warner in "The Raiders" and, like her maiden screen characterization, neither of these was a "vampire" on paper; i. e., the author, in neither instance, prescribed "vamping" as part of the action. Notwithstanding this, Miss Dalton "vamped" unconsciously. Not because she wanted people to think she was a full-fledged shatterer of hearts before the camera did she make pulses beat hard and fast, but because she couldn't help it: "I guess I just must have been born that way!"

Then came "Tecolote"—and also her rights to "vamp" all she wanted to. For, it was a part intended for a "vampire," such as Miss Dalton had proven to be. And in her exquisite rendition of the role, she was what the author described her as being—a voluptuous bauuty, in whose eyes lurked the fires of an unquenchable passion."

THE newest vehicle in which Miss Dalton beams from the screen is entitled "The Jungle Child." It is a weird drama of the Brazilian forests and New York City and concerns the adventures of a Spanish beauty whom Fate rears as a Tupi Indian maid. Miss Dalton's part is one that like her Tecolote sets off her striking beauty to advantage.

Dorothy Dalton came mighty near being a Chicago society belle—her father and mother are Mr. and Mrs. J. Hamilton Dalton and upon her graduation from finishing school they began to make preparations for her debut in the upper circle of the ballroom—but a good judge of the feminine happened along and told her she belonged on the stage. She had some stock company experience and then Ince took a look at her. Inceville immediately became blessed with a new Goddess. She hankers to play dainty ingenues but in this she regards herself in the wrong light. Ince is making her do what he thinks she was destined to do.

WILLIAM C. DOWLAN, DIRECTOR, AMERICAN

AN experience of fourteen years in dramatic stock, playing in the best theatres in America, and appearing in leading parts of the recent successes of the stage, gave to William C. Dowlan an insight into dramatics and stage-craft that is greatly aiding him in his work as a director of the American Film Company at Santa Barbara.

Mr. Dowlan was born at St. Paul, Minn., and received his education at the Christian Brothers School in that city. Almost immediately after finishing his education he took up work on the stage, and with the exception of the time when he managed and starred in his own road company, he played in stock and productions.

In this period he played in many of the principal theatres from coast to coast, appearing at Chicago, Philadelphia, Vancouver, B. C.; Omaha, Portland, Ore.; the Oliver Morosco stock at Los Angeles, and at Dallas, Texas, and in other cities.

More than five years ago, Mr. Dowlan became affiliated with the Universal and from the first played leads and became extremely popular.

Later, he was made a director, heading his own company. As Mr. Dowlan wished to devote his whole attention to producing, he asked to be relieved from acting. The lead in "Drugged Waters," a five-reel feature, being his last part.

Since then he has directed many notable features. Nearly all of which were from scenarios prepared by Leonora Ainsworth. The last feature directed for the Universal was "The Madcap," featuring Flora Parker De Haven.

He immediately after joined the American Studio at Santa Barbara, to direct Mary Miles Minter, in the six-reel feature "Youth's Endearing Charm," following that with "The Light," featuring Franklin Ritchie. He is now directing Richard Bennett in "The Lawmaker," a big feature, which will no doubt run eight reels.

The subjects under the direction of Mr. Dowlan, have caused much favorable comment, owing to their accuracy of detail, their beautiful composition and light effects and the true-to-life portrayals. Mr. Dowlan devotes little time to anything but his work and his ambition, energy and artistic temperament, together with a thorough knowledge of stage technique, is bound to show results in his productions.

Mr. Dowlan believes harmony in the company is essential to success, and from star to extra people, he is a general favorite in the Santa Barbara Studio.

AL. E. CHRISTIE, PEERLESS PRODUCER OF CHRISTIE LIGHT COMEDIES

AL. E. CHRISTIE, considered the best producer of light comedies for the screen, is a pioneer of the motion picture industry, and what he knows about making light comedies would fill a number of large books that would be eagerly sought by producers.

More than seven years ago, Mr. Christie made his first comedy, and he has been making good ones ever since. Almost five years ago he originated the Nestor Brand of comedies, and for more than four years turned out one or more a week. These became a decided feature of the Universal program.

In January of this year, Mr. Christie decided that he had worked for other people long enough, and if he could make good comedies for others, he could make them for himself, and everything considered, it would be more pleasant. In association with his brother Charles, a successful Canadian business man, he organized the Christie Film Company, which has recently been incorporated. A studio was leased where Al. made his first picture in California, almost five years before. Mr. Christie was the first Universal director in California, he bringing the first company to Hollywood, arriving there Thanksgiving, 1911.

At first it was arranged that Mr. Christie should continue Nestor Comedies which he had made for more than four years, these to be released through the Universal. This arrangement continued until in April, when he made another arrangement whereby the films were to be marketed through another program. Early in the summer, with a number of samples, Mr. Christie went to New York, and there was persuaded by independent exchange men to sell his films by state rights. This was decided upon in August, and he immediately returned and took up the production of additional subjects. The first independent release was made in September, and the management of the Strand Theatre, New York, and other houses of almost equal importance throughout the country, were eager to add these to their programs. The Christie Company now has closed with exchanges in practically every section of the country, Australia, Europe and South America, where their subjects may be rented.

The Christie studio in Hollywood is thoroughly equipped. The technical department is complete, there is an excellent laboratory in connection, under the supervision of William Horsley, and the studio is in every way best equipped to make the one, two or even larger comedy subjects of any on the coast. Twice, since organizing the company in January, Mr. Christie has found need of additional space for settings and stage room, and recently he found it to his advantage to purchase the ground on which the studio stands.

The Christie studio staff is made up of experts and artists. It is more like a big family in which all are working for the benefit of the father. This co-operation is shown very emphatically in the films. In the following pages will be found detailed biographies of the Christie players.

With Al. E. Christie, who has written more than three hundred original scenarios and produced almost five hundred comedies, as its directing genius, the Christie Film Company is sure to succeed. It has frequently been said that Mr. Christie can see comedy in anything, even a hearse, and as a builder of comedy situations, he is without a peer.

Well-Known Screen Players Appearing Exclusively in Christie Comedies

Eddie Barry, Miss Billie Rhodes and Harry Ham Featured Leads in Christie Comedies

THE names of Miss Billie Rhodes, Eddie Barry and Harry Ham have within the past few weeks been heralded as the leads for Christie Comedies, as the producer of these attributes much of the success of his past films, as well as his present releases, to the very excellent performances given by these players.

Miss Billie Rhodes needs no introduction on the screen, for she has been playing before the camera for more than three years. One year she was under the direction of George Melford in drama for the Kalem Company, where she was featured in "Daughter of the Underworld," "Perils of the Sea," and a number of others. For two years she has played under the direction of Al. E. Christie in Nestor and Christie Comedies.

Prior to her engagement in pictures, Miss Rhodes had three years' experience in vaudeville and musical comedy. She played through the entire Orpheum circuit, and had one year's excellent experience in dramatic stock. Of her Nestor releases she is particularly fond of "Keeping It Dark," "Following Father's Footsteps" and "Molly's Malady." Miss Rhodes was featured in the first Christie independent two-reel release, "Bride and Gloom," and in another forthcoming picture she plays the name part of "Little Billie Buttons." She is particularly well-known for her work in the burlesque melodrama of two reels entitled "Foiled," recently released.

Miss Rhodes has dark brown hair and brown eyes, is but five feet in height, weighs one hundred and seven pounds, and because of her winsome smile has become known as "the sunshine girl of the films." She is an artist at dancing, either fancy or ballroom, and rides, swims and motors.

EDDIE BARRY has in less than a year won for himself a name as a screen comedian. He is a Philadelphia boy, and was the principal comedian in "Madame Sherry," "Knight For a Day," "Coming Through the Rye," "Stubborn Cinderella." He had stock experience at Keith and Proctor's, and other leading companies. He played "Mr. Newlywed" in vaudeville, and was one of the original Lasky Hobos. His screen experience is confined to the direction of Al. E. Christie, and he is so original and comedy antics so natural for him, that it is impossible for him to do a stunt twice the same way. Besides being a comedian, he is an expert at golf, tennis and polo, and owns one of the best polo ponies in California.

Barry lacks two inches of being six feet in height, weighs almost one hundred and forty pounds, has auburn hair and brown eyes.

HARRY HAM is the juvenile lead of this trio, and came to the screen without previous theatrical experience other than amateurs at Yale. He played first with Famous Players, supporting Elsie Janis for Bosworth, was with Metro, one of the boys in the Digby Bell "Father and the Boys," and has played with Christie since April. He appeared as lead in "The Seminary Scandal," "By the Sad Sea Waves," "His Friend the Elephant," "Bride and Gloom" and others. Mr. Ham was an automobile racer for three years, driving Fiat, Cadillac, and Chalmers in road and track races. At this he was successful, winning first and second prizes in a number of contests.

Although his screen career has been a short one, he made good from the start.

GEORGE FRENCH is known in a number of cities for his excellent dramatic stock work and characterizations, he having played on the legitimate stage 15 years. He has been under the direction of Al. E. Christie for more than a year, and always gives a good performance. He has appeared in almost every Nestor and Christie Comedy made during this time, and among his associate players he is known as the minister-actor.

STELLA ADAMS, principal character woman, has played leads for a number of motion picture companies following twelve years' experience in dramatic stock. She appeared with Hobart Bosworth and Frank Montgomery in the first Selig subject made in California. She was featured in "When Aunt Matilda Fell," "Making Over Mother," and an excellent part in "Twixt Love and the Iceman."

George French, Stella Adams and Harry Rattenberry, Sterling Players of the Christie Comedies Stock Company

HARRY L. RATTENBERRY, playing character leads, is a convert from the legitimate stage where he had twenty years' experience in opera in a repertoire of one hundred and forty-six different ones, playing in all the principal cities of the United States. He has been under the direction of Christie for three years, and never fails to register a finished performance.

Betty Compson, according to one of her admirers, should be known as "the prettiest girl in pictures," and every one who knows Miss Compson on and off the screen admit this correspondent is a good judge of beauty. This petite actress is a Salt Lake City girl who did her first professional work as a violin soloist in vaudeville. Later with a partner she played over the big time vaudeville circuits. About one year ago she came to Los Angeles en tour, and Al. E. Christie, seeing her work in the playlet "Wanted a Leading Lady," immediately sought her services, and since she has been "a leading lady" in films. Her first subject was titled the same as the playlet, but had an entirely different story. It showed her discovery by the producer and her first work at the studio. Many screen fans will remember her second release, in which she appeared as a Scotch lassie in "Where the Heather Blooms." For a year she has been featured in leading parts in one and two reel subjects. Included in the list of her releases are "Love and a Savage," "Those Primitive Days," and a number of others, all of which were made under the direction of Horace Davey.

Miss Compson is a pretty blonde with blue eyes, five feet two inches in height, and has a very attractive personality.

Horace Davey, for seven years the right hand man of Al. E. Christie, is now and has been for the past year a director of comedies, and so well has he learned Mr. Christie's style of production that it is almost impossible for one to tell from the finished subject whether Christie or Davey directed it. Mr. Davey is a native of Bayonne, New Jersey. Al. Christie induced him to leave a printing office where he had served an apprenticeship. That was seven years ago, and to this day his employer has never regretted it. For about six years Mr. Davey was assistant director to Mr. Christie, beginning work at the Bayonne studio where the first Nestor brand was made.

Mr. Davey came to the west coast with the original Nestor Company, but it was not until about a year ago that he directed his first picture. When the Christie Film Company was organized in January, Mr. Davey left the Universal to become a director for this company, and since that time he has made a Christie comedy each week.

Besides his work as assistant, and later as director, Mr. Davey has written a number of original scenarios, practically all of which have been produced. These are all of the light comedy type. Some of the most recent pictures made under the direction of Horace Davey are "His Baby," "The Making Over of Mother," "Those Primitive Days," "Pretty Baby," "For Five Hundred Dollars," "Miss Billy Buttons," "He Loved the Ladies" and others.

Neil Burns, leading man and comedian for the Christie Company, and for more than a year featured in Nestor comedies, hails from Bristol, Pa. When a boy he went to Atlantic City and took up stage work. In 1907 he had his first road show experience, playing the jockey in "The Sporting Duchess." Later he appeared in "Just Out of College," where he did his first stage dances. In "The Stubborn Cinderella" he appeared as Skeeter; was Berty in "The Girl in the Taxi," and played juvenile in "The Girl of My Dreams" and "The Winsome Widow." While playing a musical comedy engagement in Los Angeles he was induced to take up screen work by Al. E. Christie. That was more than eighteen months ago. He first played in the Nestor brand, and then remained with the Christie organization when the Christie Company was formed in January. That Neil Burns is a versatile comedian is shown by the wide range of parts he has played, he taking everything from a Wall Street bank clerk to that of a down-and-out coon.

In addition to being original with respect to comedy stunts, he is also the author of a number of comedy scenarios. He has written and played in "A Looney Love Affair," "Saved by a Skirt," "The Boy, the Girl and the Auto," "His Neighbor's Wife," "A Leap Year Tangle," and "His Baby."

NOLAN LEARY, ETHEL LYNNE AND DAVE MORRIS

ANOTHER popular leading woman of Christie Comedies is Ethel Lynne, who deserted the vaudeville stage one year ago to play before the camera. Her first part was that of a lead, and Director Christie has since featured her in many of his excellent comedies. Besides a vaudeville engagement Miss Lynne played in musical comedy for two seasons. Her last engagement was with the company which visited Honolulu after playing the principal cities along the coast.

Under the direction of Mr. Christie, Miss Lynne has played in "Across the Hall," "Wanted—A Husband," "Love and a Savage," and many others Miss Lynne was born at Longview, Texas, and is a decided brunette with dark hair and dark brown eyes.

Nolan Leary, who is playing leading man and juvenile roles, came to the Christie Company after a motion picture experience with Pathe at New York and Jersey City studios, following a legitimate stage career of several years. He was with the original "Red Mill" and "The Rosary" companies, played in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," William A. Brady's "Mother," and had several seasons in the best known stock companies, and was with Howard Kyle in "The Master Mind," and on Keith's vaudeville for one season.

Mr. Leary has brown hair, blue eyes, is five feet eight inches in height, and was educated at St. Matthais School, Musketeer, Iowa. He rides, swims and plays golf.

Dave Morris is another good comedian of the Christie organization. He has had five years' experience in pictures, playing first for three years with the Biograph, then going to Keystone, and prior to taking up work with Christie he was with the Kalem and L-Ko Companies. His picture work followed several seasons on the legitimate stage where he was with Cohan & Harris, Klaw & Erlanger, George W. Lederer, Singer Amusement Company and others. Mr. Morris is a native of Chicago and received his education at the University of Illinois.

He is an athlete with rare ability as a swimmer. He rides well and has won considerable reputation as an artist with the brush. He is five feet ten inches in height, weighs one hundred and fifty pounds, has dark complexion, dark hair and blue eyes.

ANN KIRK, LEADS, ESSANAY

ANN KIRK, like many of her contemporaries, graduated from the Ziegfeld "Follies" stage into screen work. Born in New York City in 1894, upon the completion of her education in the public schools, she became a featured dancer in the Ziegfeld reviews.

After four seasons with the "Follies," Miss Kirk joined the Essanay Company in July, 1915. Her Spanish type of beauty—olive complexion, black hair and brown eyes—at once attracted the favorable notice of the critics and the public.

Miss Kirk is five feet four inches tall, and weighs one hundred and twenty-eight pounds.

Some of her best pictures have been "The Rose of Italy," "A Traitor to Art," "Folly," "The Market Price of Love," and "Tides That Meet." In "The Rose of Italy" she took the part of an Italian girl. Not only were her features ideally suited to this role, but her close study of Italian gestures and facial expressions enabled her to register delicate shades of meaning very vividly.

Needless to say, Miss Kirk is an unusually fine dancer. Next to dancing, she likes golf and riding best. She is also a 33rd degree baseball fan. Nearly every free afternoon she has is devoted to "rooting" at the Cubs or White Sox parks.

EUGENE O'BRIEN, LEADS AND JUVENILES

EUGENE O'Brien was born in Dublin and received his early education there. After graduating from the University of Colorado he at once began his stage career.

His first engagement was with Elsie Janis in "The Little Duchess." He was next with Henry Woodruff in "Brown of Harvard."

He then had prominent parts in the following productions: "The Thief" and "The Builder of Bridges," with Margaret Illington and Kyrle Bellew; "Mid-Channel" and "Trelawney of the Wells," with Ethel Barrymore; "Mlle. Rosita" with Fritzi Scheff; "The Million" with Irene Fenwick; "The Case of Becky," with Frances Starr; "Kitty McKay,"; "The Beautiful Adventure" and "The Girl of Today," with Ann Murdock.

Mr. O'Brien's most recent appearances have been in the all-star cast of "The Celebrated Case," in "The Modern Shylock," and in "The Ohio Lady."

While he has only recently taken up screen work, Mr. O'Brien has already been prominent in a number of features. He played opposite Mary Pickford in "Poor Little Peppina," opposite Olga Petrova in "The Scarlet Woman,"

HARRY BEAUMONT, DIRECTOR, ESSANAY

SINCE his fourteenth birthday, Harry Beaumont has been connected with matters theatrical. His experience, embracing all positions from program boy to picture director, is responsible for his finished technique and fine sense of dramatic value.

Harry Beaumont was born in Abilene, Kansas, Feb. 10, 1888. He left high school to go on the road with a repertoire company, in which he played boy parts. After this, Mr. Beaumont played in vaudeville sketches, one of which he wrote himself.

Next came several seasons in legitimate productions, including "Under Southern Skies" "The Country Chairman" and "The Three of Us." Many summers in this period were spent with stock companies in the East and South. His last legitimate appearance was in the title role of "Checkers."

Mr. Beaumont is one of the picture pioneers. His first affiliations were with Vitagraph and Edison five years ago. During his four years' stay with the latter firm he played in "The Stoning," "The American King," "Her Husband's Son," the "What Happened to Mary" series, and many others, while his last year was spent in directing.

Since January, 1916, Mr. Beaumont has been directing for Essanay, producing such pictures as "The Little Samaritan," "Joyce's Strategy," "The Grouch," "Putting It Over," "His Little Wife," "A Rose of Italy," "Twin Fates," "Once a Thief—?," and "The Pacifist."

He is also the author of seventy-five scripts, most of which he has either directed or played in. He is five feet eight and one-half inches tall, weighs 145 pounds, and has light hair and blue eyes.

E. H. CALVERT, DIRECTOR, ESSANAY

E. H. CALVERT was born in Alexandria, Virginia, in 1890. After graduating from West Point he held the rank of Captain in the United States Army for twelve years. Some of his early career was also devoted to pioneer work in railroad surveying.

Many will remember Mr. Calvert's characterization of Capt. Hodgman in the stage production of "Arizona," and his support of William Farnum in "Ben Hur." His stage experience also included prominent parts in the "Knight for a Day" production and in a famous Pittsburg stock organization.

Joining Essanay in 1911 as an actor, Mr. Calvert began his directing career in 1912. At the very beginning he resolved to master all the details of picture making. He made a thorough study of the negative department, developing and printing rooms, the carpenter shops, the scenic artist's bench, the scenario department, and the property rooms. His intimate knowledge of these departments enables him to work in close co-operation with his assistants, and to personally supervise the minutest details of a picture's creation.

Mr. Calvert believes in leading and not driving the players he is directing. He himself often takes the lead in pictures he is making.

Mr. Calvert's biggest picture was probably "The Crimson Wing," and he considers among his best "The Man Trail," "Under Royal Patronage," "The Outer Edge," the "Tish Series," "According to the Code," and some of the subjects in which he directed Francis X. Bushman.

NELL CRAIG, LEADS, ESSANAY

Miss Craig has black hair and dark brown eyes. Her weight is 130 pounds.

NELL CRAIG was born among the classic elms of Princeton, New Jersey, June 13, 1893. She received her education at the Girls' High School in Philadelphia and at Pennington Seminary. It was during the graduation ceremony at the latter institution that her piquant, mobile face attracted the attention of a New York theatrical man.

This man reported his "find" to Henry W. Savage, and Savage at once offered the young graduate a contract. Miss Craig was immediately cast in a production that was in the rehearsal stage, and subsequently was prominent in several Savage plays.

Miss Craig's creative mind balked at playing the same role over and over for months at a time. She found the routine of playing for an entire season in one play too monotonous. On this accunt, she accepted an offer from the famous Orpheum Stock Company in Philadelphia. Miss Craig found the kind of opportunity she sought—the creating of a new role at frequent intervals. The young actress' charm and acting ability soon won for her an enthusiastic following.

When motion pictures began to emerge from the embryonic period, Miss Craig foresaw the great possibilities of the new art. By means of the new dramatic medium, she might work on a part until it was perfected, let the camera record the enacting of it, and then turn her attention to another role. Miss Craig joined the Lubin forces and appeared in that Company's productions for two years. She then affiliated herself with Pathe.

The Essanay Company claimed her services in 1914 and she has been playing leads with the Indian Head firm ever since. Miss Craig's enthusiasm for motion picture work is reflected in the amazing number of releases in which she has appeared during the last two years. She is now working on a five-reel feature, "The Barrier," adapted from the Saturday Evening Post story of the same name. In this she is co-starred with Bryant Washburn.

Miss Craig's chiefest pleasures in life, outside of her professional work, are aquatics and music. Almost every afternoon, except in the middle of winter, this star may be seen trudgeoning in Lake Michigan. Her friends wish that she were not so modest about her musical talent.

Creators of Lasky Photography

MR. ALVIN WYCKOFF, director of photography at the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, was the first photographer engaged by that organization, coming to the studio from the Selig Company where he filmed the "Count of Monte Cristo" and other notable productions.

From the time of the founding of the Lasky Company Mr. Wyckoff has been photographer for Cecil B. De Mille, director-general, and has photographed every production made by him. As the size of the studio increased, Mr. Wyckoff gradually assumed charge of the entire photographic department. When the building of the new $150,000.00 laboratory was contemplated, the plans were all made by Cecil B. De Mille and Mr. Wyckoff. Mr. Wyckoff personally supervised the erection of the plant and the installation of the machinery.

He is also the inventor of numerous appliances to aid motion picture photography, as well as a number of inventions used in connection with the laboratory, one of the latest being a film polishing device which has a capacity of more than a hundred per cent over any other polisher on the market.

It is due to Mr. Wyckoff's supervision that the excellence of the Lasky photography is known throughout the motion picture world. There is not a production bearing C. B. De Mille's name that does not also bear that of Alvin Wyckoff as the photographer. Even when that strenuous director was working on two productions at the same time Mr. Wyckoff took care of the photography of both of them, working sixteen and eighteen hours a day.

A few of the productions which he has photographed for the Lasky Company recently are "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," "Carmen,' "Maria Rosa," "Temptation," and "The Dream Girl," and was in charge of the corps of camera men filming the twelve reel version of the story of the life of Joan of Arc, in which Geraldine Farrar plays the stellar role.

Mr. Wyckoff is an authority on all photographic discussions at the Lasky studio and Mr. De Mille relies absolutely upon his judgment.

In senority, Percy Hilburn is next in line to Alvin Wyckoff in the photographic department at the Jesse L. Lasky studio.

Mr. Hilburn came to the Lasky studio after years of experience with the Vitagraph Company and at once established himself as a Lasky photographer in the production of "The Goose Girl." Since that time he has photographed many excellent productions for director George H. Melford, among them being "To Have and To Hold," "Tennessee's Pardner," "The House of the Golden Windows," "The Gutter Magdalene," "The Selfish Woman," "Puppet Crown" and others.

Charles G. Rosher is one of the oldest members of the Lasky staff of photographers. He has devoted his entire career to a close study of photography both from a technical and artistic standpoint.

His early experience was gained in Europe where he made a study of photo-chemistry under Howard Farmer. Later he entered the employ of the renowned Court photographers, Messrs. Speaight, Ltd., London.

His first motion picture experience was with the Nestor Company, at the oldest independent studio in California.

Prior to joining the Lasky Company Mr. Rosher gained a varied experience in many parts of the world in the employ of the following companies: Gene Gautier Irish Feature Plays, Pathe, the Victory Company, and the Mutual Film Corporation in Mexico with General Villa, where he photographed the battle of Ojinaga.

When William C. De Mille, the noted dramatist, was induced to act as a Lasky company director, Rosher was selected as his photographer and has since photographed all of Mr. De Mille's productions, including "The Sowers," "The Blacklist," "The Clown," "Anton, the Terrible," "The Heir to the Hoorah," and others.

Albert C. Palm, superintendent of the Lasky laboratories, has been in charge of that branch of the company's work directly under Alvin Wyckoff for some time. Prior to the building of the new laboratory, Palm was directly responsible for all the company's negatives. Since the new laboratory has been built, and all the prints are made at the Lasky plant, Palm has been the direct head of a large staff of employees in all departments.

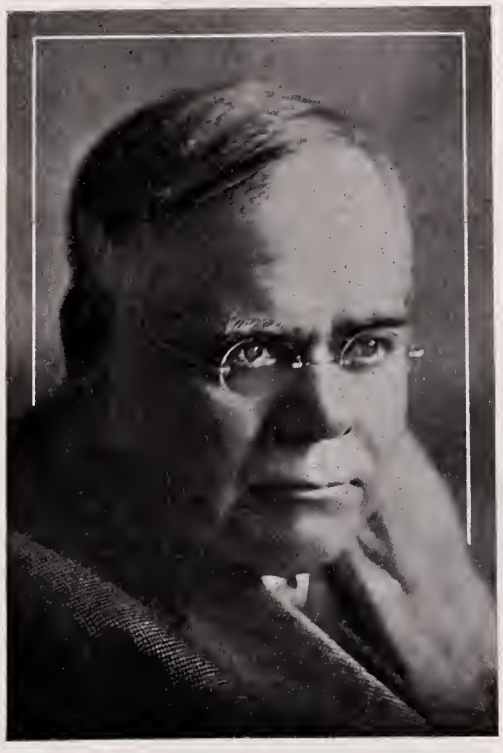
OTIS TURNER, DIRECTOR, FOX



OTIS Turner, the first legitimate stage director to enter the motion picture field as a director, and who has the distinction of having made the first three reel subject and taught a number of the best directors of today their first lessons in the film art, recently left Universal, after almost five years of continuous service, and is now directing William Fox photoplays.

Mr. Turner was born in Fairfield, Indiana, and was educated in Indianapolis. At eighteen he did his first dramatic work, and continued on the stage until about eleven years ago. While on the stage Mr. Turner was with Henry W. Savage's "The College Widow," and other big productions. He produced the "Wizard of Oz" stories by L. Frank Baum, "The Two Orphans" and a number of other successes.

About eleven years ago he did his first work for pictures when he accepted an offer of William Selig to direct. He made the first wild animal picture titled "Hunting Big Game in Africa"; the first feature picture made in America, "The Spirit of '76"; the first war picture, "Stormy Days In Old Virginia"; the first western, "The Cowboy Millionaire." His "Coming of Columbus" was the first three reel picture.

Among the well-known directors of today who did their first work under Mr. Turner are Bob Leonard, William Worthington, Frank Lloyd, Herbert Brenon and others. The screen stars who first worked under the direction of Mr. Turner are Mabel Taliaferro, Tom Kerrigan, Fred Walton, Ethel Grandin, Kate Williams, Charles Clary, Harry Pollard, Marguerite Fischer, Tom Mix, Myrtle Stedman, Herbert Rawlinson, and Ann Little.

Mr. Turner originated the plots for "The Black Box" serial, produced "Damon and Pythias," and made Universal features starring Nat Goodwin, George Fawcett, and others.

Two of his latest pictures are "Little Brother of the Rich" with Hobart Henley, Hobart Bosworth and Jane Novak, and "Son of The Immortals" with Jack W. Kerrigan.

In August Mr. Turner went with the Fox organization, and his first picture there is an adaptation of Roy Norton's "Mediator" with George Walsh as star.

WILLIAM CLIFFORD, LEADS, WILLIAM FOX

WILLIAM CLIFFORD, now with the William Fox producing company, has been identified with dramatic art from his youth, in legitimate stage portrayals and the silent drama.

Born at New Orleans, La., in 1882, Mr. Clifford was transplanted to Toronto, Canada, where he received his education, musical training and voice culture. Not yet out of his 'teens he decided on a professional career and selected the stage.

For eighteen years Mr. Clifford's name attracted wide attention. He made a reputation as a tragedian and student of Shakespeare. During that time his best work was with Mantell, Walker Whiteside and Mildred Holland. With his own company of repertoire players, Mr. Clifford toured the United States, offering such successes as "Prisoner of Zenda," "When Knighthood Was in Flower" and Shakespeare repertoire.

In 1910 he was offered a contract by Gaston Melies. His initial screen work was impressive and he was later attracted by the Vitagraph company. Later Mr. Clifford drew a berth with Pathe. To undertake another line of sceren work he later went with Kalem and eventually the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

When the Mission Play was being made ready for production, Mr. Clifford received a call to create the role of Father Junipero Serra, but because of the lengthy wait he affiliated himself with the new Bison company of the Universal corporation and starred in the first picture. He made the Hawaiian tour with Henry McRae and likewise the Orient.

The great chance to create the screen portrayal in "The Second in Command," as played on the legitimate stage by John Drew and Cyril Maude, was given to Mr. Clifford by the new Quality Metro company, and so successful was his work that he was placed in one of the leading roles of the beautiful "Rosemary" photoplay, John Drew's role. The Quality players were called to New York City, and Mr. Clifford, not wishing to remove his wife and two little tots from the sunshine of Southern California, resigned.

David Horseley then offered Mr. Clifford a contract, and he accepted. It was eight months ago that Mr. Clifford played his first part for the Horseley studios and during that time he has been starred in many dramas which have placed him among the best in the film world.

Characters of the strong, fearless nature are best suited to Mr. Clifford, and his daring in dramas has been the cause of nation-wide comment. Mr. Clifford's portrayals while with the Horseley forces were many. Among his most recent appearances are: "The Jungle Flashlight," "The Trap," "Fate's Decision," "Destiny's Boomerang," "The Good-For-Nothin' Brat," "The Ostrich Tip," "The Heart of Tara," "The Hidden Law" and many others of a sociological or psychological nature.

He is an expert horseman, swimmer of repute, proficient at golf, tennis, and in fact an all-around athlete. He is a man of wonderful personality and character, of well proportioned physique, with classical features and dark expressive eyes.

"SMILING" BILLY MASON, LEADING MAN, FOX

AFTER the name of "Smiling" Billy Mason the title of director, leading man, juvenile, or comedian may be added.

Mason hails from Chicago and did his first professional work for the Walter L. Mann circus. He was in "The Shepherd King," in the original company of "The Girl of My Dreams," and other successful productions. His first work was with Pathe. His next engagement was with Wharton, Inc., in "The Prince of India." He appeared in Essanay subjects made at Chicago, and for World Film played Ring Lardner's "You Know Me, Al" series. For Universal he wrote and produced the "Baseball Bill" series of comedies, and is now the featured leading man.

DAL CLAWSON, PHOTOGRAPHIC GENIUS, FOX HOLLYWOOD

SEVERAL of the most important photographic effects perfected during the past year, were those worked out by Dal Clawson, now camerman for the Fox Film Corporation and working at their Hollywood studio.

For several years Mr. Clawson has been winning praise from the motion picture critics for the exceptional effects he has been able to put in the films he has photographed. One of his most recent inventions he has termed "a traveling dissolve." By this method he fades out one section of the frame, while in another portion the action continues and eventually takes up the entire screen.

ANOTHER excellent effect recently introduced by Clawson is "the spotlight iris." This gives the same effect for the projected picture as a spotlight on a darkened stage, bringing out prominently the leading action or player, and giving the other the effect of being in semi-darkness. This aids wonderfully in showing a person holding a lamp near the face. An iris attachment for the Bell & Howell camera has also been perfected by this camerman.

In practically every picture Clawson has made in the past three years, he has introduced new features that have greatly added to the subject. He is a thorough student of photography, and answers more questions of cameramen than any one photographer on the West Coast.

G. BENOIT, CAMERAMAN

G. BENOIT, cameraman for the R. A. Walsh Fox Film Corporation Company, was born at Paris, France, November 27th, 1883, and after receiving an education in the public schools, became one of the four members of the first producing staff of the Gaumont Company in 1899. He remained with this organization serving in every department of motion picture photography for a number of years, and then went to the Eclair. By this company he was transferred to their American studio in 1912.

When the Reliance and Majestic Company was organized by D. W. Griffith, he was engaged by them, and remained until June of 1915, when with R. A. Walsh he went to the Fox organization. In 1909 and 1910, Mr. Benoit toured Africa and Europe making scenic productions for Eclair. Benoit has photographed all subjects made under the direction of Mr. Walsh and his coming release will be the ten reel feature made under the working title of "The Honor System." He has invented a number of improvements for the camera, some of which he has sold, but most of which he uses for his individual aid.

ALFREDO GANDOLFI, CAMERAMAN, FOX

ALFREDO GANDOLFI, cameraman for the Fox Otis Turner Company, has had nine years experience in this work. He was born in Italy, and did his first camera work for the Cines at Rome. Later he was with the Itila Films at Torino, Italy, and then served with Pathe until 1910. At that time he was transferred to the American studio, and remained for three years.

When Oscar Apfel became director for the Lasky Company, Gandolfi became his cameraman, and remained with him until July of this year. He spent one year with the Lasky Company, six months at the Morosco-Pallas plant, and since July, 1915, with Fox. He filmed "The Little Minister," and all the William Farnum Fox subjects made up to this time. He was the first man to use a foreground reflector in California, and invented a double exposure sunshade which is now almost universally used.

He is a member of the Cinema Camera Club of New York.

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH, DIRECTOR-GENERAL, FINE ARTS-TRIANGLE STUDIOS

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH, who created a sensation with his "Birth of a Nation," and has followed it up with one still more wonderful, "Intolerance," is a native of Kentucky. He began his career as an actor in a Louisville stock company. Mr. Griffith also studied grand opera and developed a pleasing baritone voice.

He entered motion pictures as a scenario writer and a player in minor parts, but the technical side of the work fascinated him. This was with the Biograph company, and in less than three years from his first entrance into the Biograph studio he was considered the most promising figure among American producers.

His numerous innovations and his dramatic conception soon placed him in the foremost ranks.

Mr. Griffith was the first to use "close-ups" and "cutbacks." His early work was with the Biograph, and as supervising director for Reliance and Majestic Companies. When the Triangle film Corporation was organized he continued as supervising director for the Fine Arts features.

A greater portion of his time has been devoted to the personal direction of the Griffith features, including such well known subjects as "The Single Standard," "Home," "The Escape," "The Avenging Conscience, "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance."

Mr. Griffith is an acknowledged master of the three elements that go to make up the photoplay; the handling of players, the working of mechanical effects, and the construction of plot. In each of these divisions he has broken new ground and demonstrated the surety of his constructive genius.

Many of the actors and actresses who are now screen stars were trained by him; his employment of numbers is just as skillful as his work with individuals; and his ability as a technician is demonstrated as much by his lighting effects as by his creation of splendid panoramas.

GEORGE OVEY, COMEDIAN, HORSLEY

THE Show me State, has the distinction of producing this "Big Little Comedian" as the folks down home call him, for he was born in Kansas City. He is just 5 feet 3½ tall, weighs 130 pounds, and has brown eyes. He rides, swims, rows, drives any make of automobile, and has on several occasions driven an aeroplane.

Upon his exit from the University of Missouri he was Treasurer of the Gillis Opera House in Kansas City for three years; after which he went on the road. His first experience on the road was with Beach and Bowers Minstrels; later with the big musical extravaganza, "1492." Following this, he had the pleasure of being with the first venture exploited by the late Sam S. Shubert, Hoyt's "A Texas Steer," in which he played the part of Othello Moore. He then played several star stock engagements, playing such pieces as "The Time, The Place, and The Girl," "Isle of Spice," "Coming Thru' The Rye," "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway," "The Show Girl," "The Red Mill," "The Gingerbread Man," "The Girl Question," "Erminie," "The Royal Chef," "The Telephone Girl," "The Girl From Paris," "The Belle of New York," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Girls Will Be Girls," "The Three Twins," and many others, having played the star part in all of the above named.

Prior to his advent into moving pictures, he was for four seasons starred with road shows—two seasons with "The Runaways," playing Bluch, the part originated by the late Arthur Dunn; and two seasons in "A Knight For A Day," following John Slavin in the part of "Jonathan Joy." Both of the above named were $2.00 attractions, and the territory covered was from Coast to Coast, and from Canada to the Mexican Border.

Like many other stars of the professional stage, he felt the call to the screen, and after refusing several very good offers, he finely accepted a most flattering contract from Mr. David Horsley to be starred and exclusively featured in comedy. His first picture with Mr. Horsley was "Count Padinski," a MinA released on the General Program. When Mr. Horsley changed to the Mutual Program the brand was changed to Cub, and Mr. Ovey as the star of the Cubs has been largely responsible for the popularity as well as the financial success of Cub Comedies. Among the best of his comedies are, "A Mix-up in Males," "Jerry on the Job," "Jerry's Busy Day," "The Knockout," "Jerry to the Rescue," "Jerry in Mexico," "The Winning Punch," "The Conquering Hero," "Jerry's Big Haul," and many others.

Mr. Ovey has made an international reputation, being as popular in England and Europe as he is in the Americas. This is remarkable when you consider that he has accomplished all this in the short period of one year.

KALEM HAM COMEDY COMPANY

ONE of the few if not the only company to continue with the same personnel is that under the direction of Lloyd V. Hamilton, which consists of Albert E. (Bud) Duncan, Ethel Teare and Al Edmundson. This is the Kalen-Ham Comedy Company. The first three have played together since the first comedy of this branch was issued, more than two years ago, and nothing could speak more complimentary of the work of these artists than the above fact.

LLOYD VERNON HAMILTON is the originator of this branch of comedies, and has written many of the stories used in addition. He has directed the production of a very large percentage of the releases to date. Mr. Hamilton was born at Oakland, Cal., and is twenty-four. He was educated in Oakland public and high schools, and at fifteen became advance agent for the Frank Cooley shows.

When he was six he stole sheets from the house to make a circus tent in the back yard. His second season was with Elleford stock company touring the Coast and then he became juvenile lead for James K. Hackett, and for two seasons played in support of this actor in "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Monsieur Beaucaire." The following years he was in stock, musical comedy and burlesque.

More than two years ago, Hamilton joined the Kalem Company and became its featured comedian, and has retained that position ever since, except for a few months he was unable to work as result of an accident in which bones of his foot were crushed.

His hobby is hunting, and he has a very fine collection of guns. He is an excellent swimmer and has several medals for diving. He stands six feet one inch and weighs two hundred and five pounds.

ALBERT EDWARD DUNCAN, the miniature comedian "Bud" of Kalem Ham comedies, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., Hallowe'en, 1886.

His career as a professional entertainer began soon after he completed a course at Berkeley Military School at New York, for it was then he became assistant treasurer of the Grand Opera House.

When a juvenile actor was needed in the production of "The Postmaster's Daughter," with Laura Dean, this miniature made his first stage appearance. He secured the name "Bud" in the part of Bud McGinnis in "Playing the Ponies."

One of his best parts was in "A Night in a Music Hall," which he played on U. B. O. time. He was with Kolb and Dill following this.

He played in "Summer Widowers" at the Broadway theatre, and then went into vaudeville with Clarence Kolb in "The Delicatessen Shop," Orpheum time.

This took him to the Coast where he and Lee Moran organized a troupe in which they were the sole players, and together they did vaudeville for two years. Then "Bud" became little Jeff, of Mutt and Jeff, the comedies.

Bud was not sure whether or not he wanted to leave the Legit, and it took several tries in pictures before he was weaned away. The last time he was away from the studio he toured the west coast of Mexico in a 40 foot boat, to secure a travelogue film. Upon his return in 1914, he joined Kalem and has since appeared weekly in a new Ham comedy.

ETHEL TEARE, leading woman of the company is a very pleasing comedienne. Miss Teare is a native of Arizona where she drank of the famous waters of the Hassayampa River, which is said to so affect every one who drinks of it that they are thereafter unable to speak the truth.

She was born at Phoenix, and there received a high school education with special training in music.

She became a vaudeville stage singer and played the best circuits. It was following the second tour over vaudeville circuit that she accepted an engagement with the Kalem Company. For several months she appeared with Ham and Bud and then was given a feature part in the newly organized company. She was featured in a score or more comedies and then the Kalem Company headed the incessant demand of the exhibitors that she again play with Ham and Bud.

Miss Teare is equal to all occasions required by the scenarios for the Ham comedies, appearing in ingenue as well as elderly character parts.

She enjoys the work in comedies despite the many hazards and extremely fast action required at times, but of all prefers the sweetheart parts.

AL EDMUNDSON is the most recent addition to the Ham Comedy Company. He is a former actor of the legitimate stage. Born in Pueblo, Colorado, and educated there and at the University of Chicago. He did his first work in stock companies of leading theatres and toured the Orient, China and Japan with the Dramatic Stock Company. One season he played in Grostark, appearing in the role of Baron Bodanglos, replacing the famous actor Atkins Lawrence.

Mr. Edmundson's first work in pictures was for the World's Film Corporation, he playing in "The M' Lis" and "The Butterfly." In the Universal subject, "Just Jim," he appeared as Governor Stillman.

January first, of this year, he went to the Kalem Company and has since played leading heavies. He is five feet ten inches in height, weighs 150 pounds and has light complexion, light brown hair and blue eyes.

It has been my life's work to produce a superior grade of screen comedies and it is my ambition to perfect the output of the Keystone Film Company to even a higher standard than has ever been reached in the past; this regardless of cost, either in money or human energy.

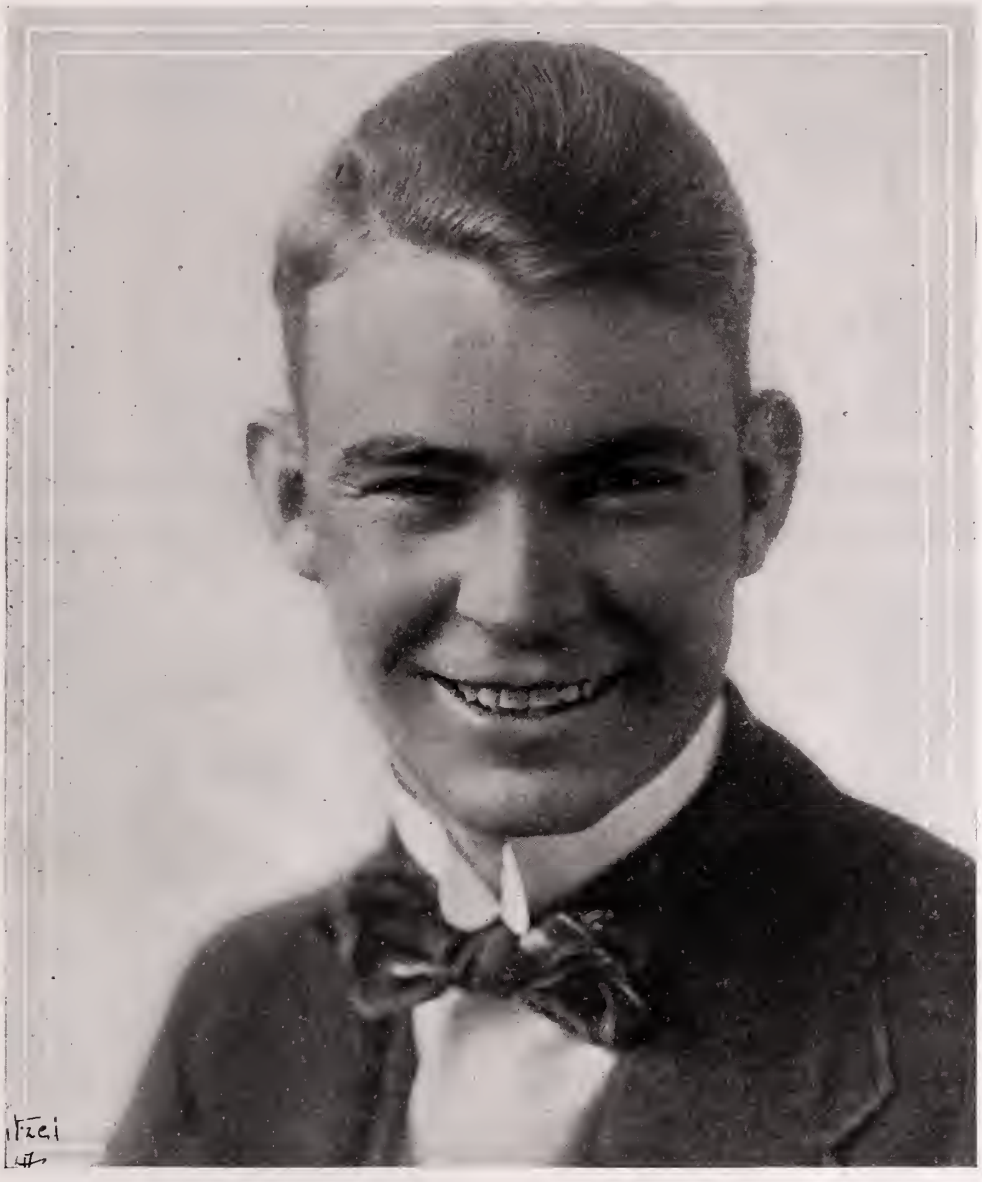
RICHARD JONES SELECTED TO DIRECT MABEL NORMAND IN HER FEATURE PRODUCTIONS

WHEN the Mabel Normand Film Company was organized Richard Jones was selected to serve as Studio Manager and Director for the comedy-drama productions starring the former Keystone girl and perhaps best known comedienne of the screen.

Studio Manager Jones received this promotion as the result of the very excellent work he had performed during the past four years he has been associated with Mr. Sennett, where Miss Normand learned of his work. He has been engaged in work pertaining to the motion picture industry for six years, and the first two were in association with O. T. Crawford, at St. Louis. When he came to the Keystone Mr. Jones became the personal aid of Mr. Sennett in the important work of cutting or editing the Keystone comedies which immediately made a name for Mr. Sennett. After eighteen months in this work he was given a company and from that time until he went to his new position he served as Director, producing many of the most successful Keystone character comedies.



Richard Jones, Studio Manager and Director Mabel Normand Film Company

Since the Keystone became a part of the Triangle program Mr. Jones has produced several of the most successful. His first release on this program was that titled "The Game Old Knight," which had Charles Murray and Harry Booker as its stars. Another of his big successes was that titled "The Judge," with Harry Booker in the featured part, the name role. Another success released recently was "The Love Riot," with four of the best known Keystone players—Charles Murray, Louise Fazenda, Harry Booker and Alice Davenport in the featured parts.

Now Mr. Jones has been engaged in producing the first Mabel Normand comedy drama which will be completed shortly. To date it is known under the title "Pat," and the present plans provide that it shall consist of seven reels. When released it is expected that it will create a sensation in the film world, because of the many novel features introduced and the exceptional work of the star. This picture has many dramatic scenes for the world famous screen comedienne and Miss Normand's best talent will be shown in this subject.

J. FARRELL MACDONALD, DIRECTOR, KEYSTONE

J. FARRELL MACDONALD, Director, with a long list of successes to his credit, released on the Universal, General and other well-known programs, has had a varied experience which adds much to his store of knowledge beneficial to him in his work in filmdom.

Mr. Macdonald was born at Waterbury, Conn., April 14, 1875, and received his public school education at Toronto, Canada, graduating from the high schools. He then attended Yale University, and following his college career became a civil engineer in the employ of the government.

Mr. Macdonald's first theatrical experience was with Willis P. Sweatman. He played with the Comstock minstrels; for a number of years he appeared in light opera in all parts of the United States and Europe. While in this work he devoted a portion of his time to the composition of music.

The first picture experience of Mr. Macdonald was under the direction of G. M. Anderson, who at that time was with the Selig Polyscope Company. Following this he was with Biograph for a short time in New York, after which he returned to the legitimate stage.

His next work in pictures was for the Imp company, when he directed as well as played his own leads. For a time he was employed by Pathe Freres as director, and then went to the Universal as producer. His biggest work there was the making of "Samson," which was a history making subject at that time.

When the Oz company was organized, Mr. Macdonald was employed as director and was in charge of the making of all Oz subjects with the exception of several one-reel comedies. Following this came an engagement with the Tiffany company in which he played the part of Colonel Thorpe with Mrs. Leslie Carter in "The Heart of Maryland." In "Rags" Mr. Macdonald appeared in the part of Ferguson opposite Mary Pickford.

His engagement with Biograph began in January, 1915, and since that time he has made twenty-one features, the most prominent ones being "Lorna Doone," "Black Sheep," "Captain Fracasse," "Felix Holt, Radical," "The Laurel of Tears," "A Woman Without a Soul," "The Step-Mother," "Stronger Than a Woman's Will," "Tides of Retribution," "Reapers of the Whirlwind" and "The "Battle of Truth." Mr. Macdonald has never regretted the attention he gave to athletics. He had the distinction of being named as one of the principal members of the Yale eleven. He is six feet in height, and tips the scales near two hundred

GLEN CAVENDER, DIRECTOR, KEYSTONE

GLEN CAVENDER, after four years' experience in motion picture work, more than three years of which were spent at the Keystone studio, where he learned the art of comedy making from Mack Sennett, was promoted to the position of director, and for nearly a year has been making comedies for this brand on the Triangle program.

Cavender is a son of Arizona, born at Tucson. He learned riding and roping there, and was with Buffalo Bill for two seasons. After this came four seasons in vaudeville with a musical act known as Cavanaugh & Chane. It was following his vaudeville experience that Mr. Cavender went into pictures. He was first with the St. Louis Company at Albuquerque, a short time with the Universal, and later with the New York Motion Picture Corporation. He has played in a number of Keystone comedies, and directed the production of "The Lion and the Girl," with Joe Jackson and Claire Anderson. Following this he played in "The Surf Girl."

Cavender is an all around athlete, horseman and western rider, and one of the very few Americans who has been awarded a medal of the Legion of Honor of France. Such a gold medal was given him by the French government in 1901 for bravery during the Boxer rebellion.

Charles Spencer Chaplin, World's Foremost Comedian, Personally Directs All Scenes of Mutual Super Comedies

THE Lone Star Studio is the home of Charlie Chaplin and of the world's super-comedies, which are released on the Mutual Program. Situate on the fringe of the motion-picture studio area in Hollywood, it occupies a whole block and is probably the most pleasant studio in California.

The world's greatest comedian directs his own productions and conceives the great majority of the situations and stories himself. He is assisted by Vincent Bryan, writer of a thousand lyrics and song hits, and owes much to the technical skill of Ed. Brewer, his mechanical director, George Cleethorpe ("Scotty"), his art director and master of properties, in the productions themselves. Roland Totheroh and "Duke" Zalibra are his cameramen and their splendid photography is handled in the laboratories by Charles Levin, one of the most skilled chemical experts in the profession.

The plant is presided over by Henry P. Caulfield, the general manager, and his lieutenant, Fred H. Bagley, the former being largely responsible for the warm co-operative spirit which characterizes the entire Chaplin forces.

The company of players is headed by Miss Edna Purviance, the popular leading-lady, and Eric Campbell, the three-hundred-pound comedy-villain whose work has attracted so much attention since the first Chaplin-Mutual story "The Floorwalker" was released.

The remainder of the company is composed of Leo White, Lloyd Bacon, Albert Austin, Charlotte Mineau, John Rand, James T. Kelly, Frank Coleman and Fred Goodwins, who also handles the Press Department.

The Lone Star plant has witnessed the making of six Mutual Super-comedies up to the time of writing, viz., "The Floorwalker," "The Fireman," "The Vagabond," "One A. M." (the first single-handed two-reel picture ever made), "The Count" and "The Pawnshop."

Charlie Chaplin's $670,000 contract calls for the release of one two-reel comedy per month and is the biggest individual agreement ever made in the annals of the profession of entertainment.

The phenominal flight of Chaplin from the ranks of small-time vaudeville to his preeminent position in the motion-picture industry has been the most romantic event in the whole history of that industry, and until the far-distant day when a peer shall be found, Charles Spencer Chaplin will remain what he has been for nearly two years—The World's Foremost Comedian.

NILES WELCH, JUVENILE LEADS

NILES WELCH, one of the most popular of the juvenile leading men on the screen, was born in Hartford, Conn., July 29, 1888, and was educated at St. Paul's school, Concord, N. H., Yale and Columbia universities. During his college days he achieved a wide reputation as an athlete and was a member of most of the teams and crews that represented Yale and Columbia. To round off his education Welch went abroad and spent two years in France studying literature, languages, painting and the drama.

Upon his return to this country he took up the stage as a profession and for three years played juvenile leads with different stock companies. Welch made his debut as a screen player with the Vitagraph Company and for over a year he played leading juvenile roles with that organization. Leaving there he went with the Kalem Company and then to the Metro, where he was leading man for Mary Miles Minter, Ann Murdock and Ethel Barrymore. His splendid work in "The Royal Family," "Emmy of Stork's Nest," and "The Kiss of Hate," will long be remembered.

When the World Film produced "The Crucial Test" with Kitty Gordon, Welch was especially chosen by Wm. A. Brady as her leading man. Following this he went with the Universal and was featured with Mary Fuller and Violet Mersereau in a number of different productions. One of his most popular successes was in the Astra-Pathe production, "The Blossom and the Bee," in which he played opposite Pearl White.

Welch is six feet tall and weighs 160 pounds. He is still an enthusiastic athlete and all round sportsman and he brings to the screen a personality as vigorous as it is charming.

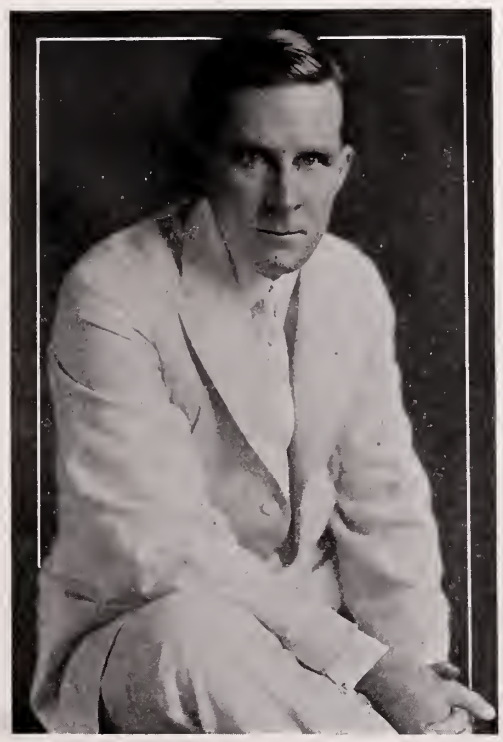
WILLIAM DESMOND TAYLOR, DIRECTOR, MOROSCO



MUCH of the success of a number of Morosco subjects made during the past year must be attributed to the direction of William Desmond Taylor. He has been in charge of filming "Pasquale" with George Beban as star; "Davy Crockett" and "The Parson of Panamint" which stars Dustin Farnum, and the adaption of the E. P. Roe story "He Fell in Love With His Wife."

Mr. Taylor is an Irishman, born April 26, 1877. He was educated at the Clifton College, England, and did his first dramatic work in the British Isles with Charles Hawtry. For five seasons Mr. Taylor played with Fanny Davenport, and after this was with a number of different productions each for one season. His last work on the legitimate stage was with Katherine Kidder. In all he spent fifteen years in dramatic work before entering the motion picture field.

His first screen work was for Thomas H. Ince at the New York Motion Picture Corporation Studio. From there he went to Vitagraph where he played in a number of short subjects, and was featured in the name part of that five reel success, "Captain Alvarez," in which Edith Storey played the lead opposite.

For a year Mr. Taylor directed and played in pictures at the Balboa plant, then became director of Carlyle Blackwell, and was in charge of filming all the Favorite Players productions which include "The High Hand," and "The Last Chapter" by Richard Harding Davis.

From here he went to the American where he produced the largest serial ever made, "The Diamond From The Sky," in thirty two-reel episodes. From the American engagement he took up his present work at the Morosco plant.

Mr. Taylor is a painstaking director and a stickler for details, and his wide experience makes it possible for him to accurately and speedily produce pictures that win praise from the critics.

Mr. Taylor is fond of all out-of-door sports, and is a member of the Los Angeles Athletic and the Town and Country Clubs. He has a very good screen appearance, is one inch more than six feet in height, has dark brown hair and blue eyes.

When Mr. Taylor gave up acting to give all his attention to directing, the screen lost a handsome leading man, and a finished actor.

He was born at San Jose, California, in 1888, and after attending public schools and Santa Clara College, he resided on a California ranch where he learned the ways of a true westerner. For a time he also served as railroad man. The experiences of his early life have been very beneficial to him since he entered pictures nine years ago. RAYMOND WELLS, Director, Universal RAYMOND WELLS, Director, Universal Film Mfg. Co., was born in Dodge, Kan., and educated in the public schools of that city and the State University.

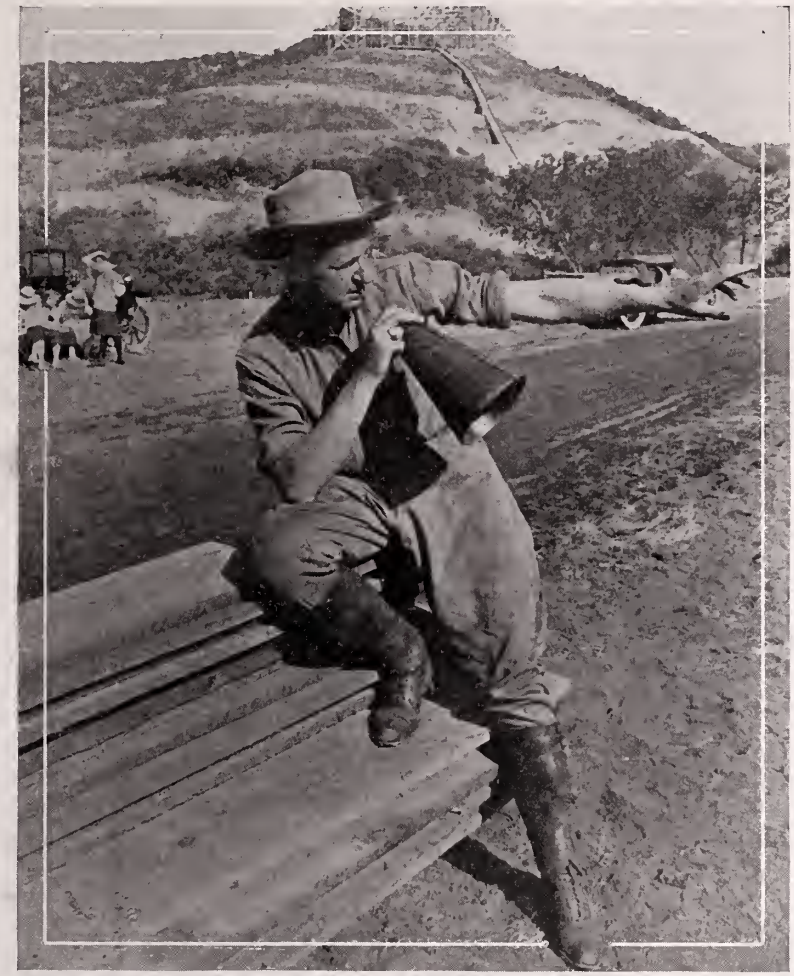
He began his long and varied experience as an actor and stage director in 1895 with the College Stock Company of Chicago; following this he appeared in stock in Portland, Ore., Minneapolis, Minn., and Kansas City, Mo. The excellent training thus derived was of great service to him in his later work when he appeared in such productions as "Ben Hur," "The Squaw Man," "The Road to Yesterday," "The Third Degree," and "Julius Cæsar," under the management of Charles Frohman, Henry B. Harris and producers of like character.



Attracting the attention of these various managers by close application to business and a knowledge of the technique of stage direction, he soon advanced to the position of stage manager and as such was in complete charge of many Broadway successes. At the first inroad of the motion picture upon the legitimate drama Mr. Wells, with creditable foresight, joined the film ranks, becoming associated with D. W. Griffith. The habit of studying very closely any work in which he is engaged stood Wells in good stead and he rapidly rose from the ranks of film actors and appeared in many distinguished productions, such as "The Sable Lorcha" with Tully Marshall, "The Flying Torpedo" with John Emerson, and in the massive presentation of Macbeth with Sir Herbert Tree.

What was perhaps the most notable accomplishment of Raymond Wells's career and also one of the most notable accomplishments in the history of the American stage was his masterly and wonderful direction of the great outdoor production of "Julius Cæsar" in the Beechwood Natural Amphitheatre, Hollywood, Cal., for the benefit of the Actors' Fund of America. The cast assembled needs only to be named that its import may be realized. William Farnum was Marc Antony; Frank Keenan, Cassius; Tyrone Power, Brutus; De Wolf Hopper, Casca; Douglas Fairbanks, Octavius; Sarah Truax, Portia; Constance Crawley, Calpurnia, and Mae Murray, premier danseuse, in the spectacle scenes. In these latter scenes some five thousand people were used and the lighting effects were marvelous beyond description. Forty thousand were in attendance and the performance received world wide recognition as a real step in the forwarding of the drama.

Following his work in this production, Mr. Wells accepted an offer from the Universal Film Mfg. Co. to produce a series of pictures and is now so engaged. The first one produced under this contract, called "The Caravan," has been accounted one of the most artistic films of recent times. He has also directed Ruth Stonehouse in "The Saintly Sinner" and "Kincaid, Gambler," the latter a story from his own pen. Mr. Wells spends his spare time when he has any, which is very rare, in motoring and improving his golfing score. Address, Universal City, Cal.

MYRTLE GONZALEZ, LEADS, UNIVERSAL

AN artist in photoplays who prior to becoming a motion picture actress had little or no experience, and from the first was successful as a leading woman is Myrtle Gonzalez, now playing featured leads for Universal films.

A little more than four years ago Miss Gonzalez applied for a position with a motion picture company, and her first application placed with the Vitagraph company resulted in her engagement, and for more than four years she remained with this company, playing leads in subjects of various sizes from one-reel pictures to six-reelers like the Blue Ribbon feature, "Capt. Alvarez."

The little experience Miss Gonzalez had on the legitimate stage was in drama with the Belasco stock company in Los Angeles, and in child parts at the Auditorium. While playing at the Belasco she was urged by motion picture exhibitors to become a motion picture actress and she followed their suggestion.

Of the many good subjects Miss Gonzalez has appeared in she is particularly pleased with the part assigned her in "Ghosts" made in two reels, "His Wife and His Work," "Capt. Alvarez," "The Great Game of Life," "Troubled Waters," "The Golden Grain," and that recent success, "The Chalice of Courage," in which she played the featured part of Enid Maitland.

Following a number of engagements as a child actress Miss Gonzalez entered Sacred Heart Convent in Los Angeles, where she reamined a student until she completed the course. It was following this that she was a favorite in stock, and took up motion picture work.

During school days Miss Gonzalez took advantage of securing an athletic training, learning to swim, ride and play gymnasium games. In her picture work she has played parts that required very daring feats.

Recently Miss Gonzalez has appeared in the star parts of "It Happened in Honolulu," "The Secret of the Swamp," and "The Girl of Lost Lake." Her last work was in "The Romance of Billygoat Hill" and "The End of the Rainbow."

Miss Gonzalez is an ideal leading woman, being but a few inches more than five feet in height. She has light brown hair and eyes that photograph well. She is a native daughter of California, was born in Los Angeles, where she has lived all her life despite the fact that she has gained a world-wide reputation.

JOHN McDERMOTT, DIRECTOR, UNIVERSAL

JOHN McDERMOTT, Universal director, was born in Green River, Wyoming, in 1895. At the time of John's birth his father was one of the leading hotel men of the West, owning a string of hotels throughout Wyoming and Nevada. In addition to this he was Sheriff of the famous Big Horn County, Wyoming.

From Green River the family moved to Ogden, Utah, and it was here that young McDermott received his early training and first evinced a desire to go on the stage. The boy persuaded the elder McDermott to advance him sufficient money to go to New York to enter dramatic school. Upon arriving in New York, he was not impressed with the quality of training offered by schools of dramatic art and determined upon the more practical preparation of actual stage work.

He soon attracted the attention of Flo Ziegfeld and began his stage career under that manager's direction in "The Winsome Widow." Within less than six months he gained country-wide notice by substituting for Frank Tinney without any change on the program. The fact that Tinney had been away was not known for some six months after when Rennold Wolf, the dramatic critic, told the whole story. Mr. McDermott then entered vaudeville as a monologist and worked over the Keith circuit for two years.

He was then persuaded by his father to abandon the stage and take up a business career, becoming a junior member of the firm of John W. McDermott & Son, wholesale dry goods merchants, Los Angeles, Cal. Owing to ill health, the father retired and the young man became the sole owner of the firm of John W. McDermott & Co.

He soon tired of business life, however, and sold out once more, entering the dramatic field, this time using motion pictures as his medium. His first engagement was in support of Dorothy Gish in "Old Heidelburg." Later he was connected with the Lasky, Kalem and New York Motion Picture companies, playing a variety of parts. During all this latter period he was writing photoplays and the combination of his writing and acting so attracted General Manager H. O. Davis of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. that he made McDermott an offer to write and direct a series of pictures. Under this contract Mr. McDermott has produced "The Red Head," "The Modern Cain," "Married a Year," "His Harmless Hobby," "The Woman and the Wife," "The Fight Within" and "She Knew."

In his private life John McDermott is just the plain, normal, energetic young American, extremely fond of a good time, but with a keen sense of limitations. He spends most of his time, when not at the studio, writing and otherwise preparing himself for the work to come. Studio address, Universal City, Cal.

MAUDE GEORGE, HEAVY LEADS, UNIVERSAL

MAUDE GEORGE, playing heavy leads in Universal features, is a California girl who chose the stage for her career nine years ago. She was born at Riverside, Cal., 1890, completed the course in the grammar and high schools, and took a special course at the Comnock School of Expression in Los Angeles.

Miss George's first engagement was in the Burbank stock company at Los Angeles, where she played in support of Blanche Hall, Harry Mestayer, Wm. Desmond, A. Byron Beasley, and a number of others, who are now prominent on the American stage and in pictures.

For two seasons she was with Conrad Le Marie in a headline act booked over the Orpheum time, during which engagement she played lead, and then took the part created by Valerie Bergere in the vaudeville sketch, "The Sultan's Favorite," in which part she remained for one season over big-time circuits.

She was understudy with the James K. Hackett company in "The Grain of Dust," and played with Nat Goodwin in "When We Were Twenty-one."

Miss George did her first work in pictures in 1914 when she was engaged by the Universal company, playing leads under the direction of Charles Giblyn. Later she was transferred to the Universal feature companies and has since played in many of the Broadway star features.

The first was in support of Hobart Bosworth in "The Little Brother of the Rich." She impersonated Blanche in "Both Sides of Life," sharing lead honors with Ella Hall.

She appeared in several numbers of "The Black Box" series, and played a part in "Cigarette," produced by the Smalleys. In "The Frame-Up" Miss George played the lead opposite George Fawcett, and was with Nat Goodwin in "Business Is Business."

In "Big Bill Brendt," with Hobart Bosworth she played the leading heavy, and her recent work was that in the adaptation from the Meredith Nicholson story, "Pennington's Legacy," in which J. Warren Kerrigan was featured. Miss George has for the past nine months played with the Jack Kerrigan company, her best releases being "The Silent Battle," "Son of the Immortals," "The Gay Lord Warring" and "The Beckoning Trail."

Miss George has confined her work on the stage as well as in pictures principally to the heavy parts, fully realizing that in the portrayal of these she could never gain public favor as is the good fortune of the actress who plays the heroine, but knowing she was best suited for such impersonations she preferred to be artistic, and so took up the playing of these which required more talent. Miss George is five feet seven inches in height. She has an olive complexion, dark brown eyes and raven hair.

Mr. Grassby was born in England in 1890. He came to this country with his parents and received his education here.

One of his first engagements on the legitimate stage was with Virginia Harned in "Anna Karenina." He received many favorable press notices, Alan Dale in the American stating that aside from John Mason, Mr. Grassby was the best member of the cast.

Following this Mr. Grassby played a season with Bertha Kalish in "Martha of the Lowlands," at the Garden theatre, New York, in the role of Morrucho. Later came a number of months in stock, and then his appearance in the part of Tweed Bix in "The Three of Us," Jose in "The Pretty Sister of Jose," and Sebastian Pasquale in the photodramatization of "The Morals of Marcus."

HENRY McRAE, DADDY OF STUNT PICTURES

WITH but one or two exceptions, Henry Alexander (Napoleon) McRae is one of the best known motion picture directors in the country.

Whenever you see "stunt" pictures, you immediately think of McRae, for it was he who made them popular. It was McRae who devised so many features and thereby introduced the "feature film" to the world.

Mr. McRae is an actor of the old school. Immediately upon his graduation in Ontario, Canada, he joined a stock company, but remained with it only two years. He advanced too fast to remain in stock very long. He formed his own company and married his leading woman, Margaret Oswald. Later he went to Seattle, where he operated a stock house. From there he went to Portland in the same capacity; then to Sacramento, and finally to San Francisco.

Mr. McRae was one of the brave men who was not afraid to take a stock company across the ocean. He played with his companies in Japan and Hawaii and the Orient. He has always been successful.

His moving picture career began when he joined Selig in Chicago in the early stages of the industry. He saw that there was a future in the business even at that time, and for a year he directed some of Selig's most successful dramas. Then he joined Universal and began putting on animal pictures. In this he proved himself the greatest of all animal directors. His "stunt" pictures attracted the attention of the heads of Universal City, as well as other motion picture producers, and after three years McRae was made director-general of all the Western Universal companies.

He remained in charge of Universal here until the work became too strenuous, when he retired to direct his own company, at which he has been eminently successful.

Mr. McRae is in love with his work. His head is chock full of ideas and he never rests. He is one of the hardest working men at Universal City. During his regime at Universal City, he has written 241 stories, which he produced, and cut all but ten of them. He has directed more than 310 photoplays since he went to the Universal, and during his three years' work with this company, has not had a day off.

EUGENE B. LEWIS, SCENARIO EDITOR, UNIVERSAL

EUGENE B. LEWIS, editor of the scenario department, Universal City, is a former newspaper man who entered the screen writing field and made good from the first.

After graduating from college, Mr. Lewis took up newspaper work. He owned and edited papers in Idaho, and then went to the Pacific Coast where he worked on the San Francisco Chronicle. Later he was affiliated with the Hearst papers in New York.

While engaged there he wrote four scenarios which he submitted to the Biograph Company, and as a result was offered a position as staff writer. WILLIAM PARKER, FEATURE WRITER

BORN Walla Walla, Washington, Sept. 17, 1886. Descendant of two generations of newspaper people. Common school education. Employed on San Francisco Examiner, San Francisco, Cal. Los Angeles Examiner and Los Angeles Herald in capacity of telegraph editor, paragraphist and editorial writer. Sold first scenario to Frank Woods, Griffith Studio, eighteen months ago. Joined American staff at Santa Barbara at personal solicitation of S. S. Hutchinson. Left Santa Barbara to join Universal staff in order to obtain wider scope in writing. Specializes in psychological and highly dramatic stories.

"I believe the future of the motion picture lies in the story," says Mr. Parker, "when there is honest and intelligent co-operation between director and author, good pictures will result. The reason there are so many bad pictures being shown is because of the lack of competent men with literary ability in authority in various studios. When the picture industry becomes a publishing business and not a manufacturing business, then we will have better pictures."

GEORGE C. PEARCE, "LEADS AND HEAVIES," UNIVERSAL

MR. Pearce was born in New York City and educated at Trinity School for the Episcopal ministry. From the age of eleven to seventeen he was a popular boy soprano, singing in all the principal churches in New York.

Some few years later, Henry E. Dixey, hearing him sing, engaged him as leading tenor for his summer opera company at the old "Globe" Theatre, Boston, Mass. He soon gained recognition not only for his voice but his dramatic ability and naturalness.

After several seasons as leading tenor in repertoire opera, he joined the late Charles Frohman's Empire Theatre Stock Company where he remained six years, playing the light comedy parts in all the productions made at the Empire during that time, including "Under the Red Robe," "The Conquerors," "My Lady's Lord," "Brother Officers," "Lord and Lady Algy," "His Excellency, The Governor" and others. The Empire Stock Company at that time included: Henry Miller, William Faversham, Robert Edeson, William Farnum, Viola Allen, Ida Conquest, May Robson, Mrs. Whiffen, Margaret Anglin and others.

He left the Henry Miller Company while playing "The Rainbow" to join The Biograph Company where he remained two years. Then he went to the Reliance-Majestic for two years and then to Griffith Fine Arts.

Mr. Pearce played the drunken degenerate king in Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks," Murphy in "The Sable Lorcha," the Missionary in "The Fox Woman," the Minister in "Martha's Vindication" and the Detective in "Casey at the Bat" with De Wolf Hopper.

In D. W. Griffith's latest masterpiece, "Intolerance," Mr. Pearce is seen as the Auctioneer in the Babylonian episode, and as Cardinal Loraine in the Huguenot period. At present he is playing leads and heavies with the Universal Company, Los Angeles, California. Permanent address: The Players, 16 Gramercy Park, New York City.

For a long time he was with the Selig Company. He played the featured part of Billy in "The Valley of The Moon," and the lead in "Smoke Bellew" for Bosworth. From there he went to the D. W. Griffith organization where he remained more than a year. His latest work there was to direct the production of "The Penitentes" and "The Price of Power" featuring Orrin Johnson. From here he went to the Universal where he has produced excellent Bluebird features.

When the Universal Company was organized Mr. Nickolaus was selected as superintendent of photography, and has since been with that organization. He first served as superintendent of the eastern laboratories, then at the coast for two years, and was recalled east to supervise the construction of the Fort Lee laboratories, and at the same time to be superintendent of the Universal laboratories at Bayonne, while the new plant was being built. The $300,000 laboratories at Fort Lee being completed under Mr. Nickolaus' supervision, he was returned to Universal City, going back to the coast last October. Just now he is supervising plans for the building of a large laboratory which will triple the capacity of the present one.

Mr. Nickolaus is thoroughly acquainted with every detail of motion picture photography, and to him is due credit for very excellent film which comes from the largest plant in the world.

BEVERLY GRIFFITH, CAMERAMAN, UNIVERSAL

BEVERLY Griffith, who is responsible to a very great extent for a number of the scoops the Universal Animated Weekly made in the Los Angeles vicinity, is a native of Butler, Georgia. He graduated from Atlanta High School and attended Georgia Military College.

Mr. Griffith received his first motion picture experience at the Keystone Studio in 1912, where he secured work as assistant property man and a short time later was promoted to the position of Assistant to Mack Sennett. When the Sterling Motion Picture Company was organized Griffith became assistant to General Manager F. J. Balshoffer, which position he retained throughout the life of the company.

Mr. Griffith was next engaged by President Carl Laemmle of the Universal to serve as business manager for five producing companies, and has remained with the Universal organization since accepting that engagement. Part of this time he has served as manager of the Animated Weekly. He spent five months in Mexico with the U. S., Carranza and Villista troops. At the studio his middle name is said to be "Speed." When anything happens, the U animated camera gets on the job. The best example of his success in securing news since, was the filming of the preparedness parade in Los Angeles, and having it on a Broadway theatre screen before the end of the parade passed the theatre.

Griffith is five feet and ten inches, and 165 pounds of energy, and has a dark complexion and brown hair and eyes.

MARSHALL STEDMAN, MANAGER EMPLOYMENT DEPARTMENT, UNIVERSAL

Sothern Company, for several years, he appeared as juvenile lead in "The Adventures of Lady Ursula," "Change Alley," "Lord Chumley," "The Lady of Lyons," "The Enemy of the King" and "King of the Musketeers." After a gold seeking experience in Colorado he returned to Chicago, where he taught acting for four years at the Chicago Musical College. From there he entered pictures at the Chicago Selig studios as an actor and scenario writer, and remained for five years. He then became manager of the Selig company on its western trip to Canyon City, Colorado, and produced a number of pictures, including "The Brand Blotter," "A Motorcycle Adventure," "The Cattle Rustlers," "The Tribal War," "'Tween Love and War," "The Suffragette," "The Saint and the Siwash," "The Mantle of Red Evans," "Object Matrimony" and "Rhoedrick's Ride."

Following an engagement with the then newly organized Bosworth, Inc., where he remained until in March of that year, Mr. Stedman became one of the four business managers of the Universal studio, resulting in his promotion to the position of assistant to director general. The work here became so great that it was found necessary to divide it among several and Mr. Stedman was made the manager of the employment department. In this capacity he is in charge of casting all pictures and selecting players, and aiding General Manager H. O. Davis in engagement of directors, writers and others. There is no part of the motion picture producing industry that Mr. Stedman does not thoroughly understand.

HENRY KERNAN VOGUE COMEDY COMPANY

Henry Kernan Gypsy Abbott Paddy McQuire

HENRY KERNAN, director of Vogue Comedy Company, making two-reel subjects for Mutual, is a native of Pittsburg, Pa., and a graduate of all the schools there and Columbia University of New York City.

Previous to motion picture experience Kernan spent a number of years on legitimate stage—eight years in drama, four years with Cohen companies, two years with Julia Marlowe, and appeared in stock at Pittsburg for two years.

The first work for the screen was with Bosworth in "Hypocrites." For the Favorite Players Company he appeared in "The Man Who Could Not Lose," did character leads in last chapter, and "The High Hand."

For a time he produced for Western Lubin Company, and was in charge of production in finishing "Gloria," the Kolb and Dill subject; in all has been in pictures three years. Mr. Kernan took his present position last summer, and has turned out a number of laugh-creating comedies of the Vogue brand.

PADDY McQUIRE, the injector of laughs in Vogue Films, was born at New Orleans, and now boasts he is twenty-eight years old and never been kissed. For five years McQuire was with the Kolb and Dill Musical Comedy Company, and toured the world with the Bob Hughes American Burlesque Company, which required two years. This closed in Los Angeles, and he went to the films. He was with Chaplin-Essanay for nine months, and became leading comedian for the Vogue upon its organization in November. He has played in more than half of the subjects made, and in each has been featured.

McQuire is five feet nine inches in his comedian shoes, weight one hundred and fifty-five in his dressing-room, has light complexion, brown hair, and blue eyes.

MISS GYPSY ABBOTT, who adds charm to Vogue comedies, was born in England, and besides eight years on the speaking stage, has had more than two years' experience in pictures. She played ingenue parts with Nat Goodwin, was in stock three years at Chicago, and did singing and dancing sketches over Orpheum and Pantages' circuits for two years. Her first work in pictures was with Balboa. Later she played with Carlyle Blackwell in "The Key to Yesterday" and "The High Hand"; with Henry Walthall she appeared in "Beulah," and also had an important part in "St. Elmo." Another late release is "Vengeance is Mine." Early this year Miss Abbott went to the Vogue Company, where she has since been featured. One of her best releases is "Ten Thousand Bucks."

Miss Abbott is but five feet three inches in height, and weighs one hundred and sixteen pounds. She has jet black hair, brown eyes, and is dark complexioned.

BEN H. ROTHWELL, assistant director of this company, has been in pictures for seven years, following two seasons in Mutual comedy, and one at Elrich Garden, Denver. He has been affiliated with the Lubin, Universal, American and Liberty and Vogue companies; and for the Liberty directed the production of "The Strangest Man in the World," a five-reel picture. He attended University of Colorado, and for a time was student at Lorenzo, Germany. He understands every detail of the motion picture production, and played characters and juveniles with Arthur Johnson for Lubin, and played opposite Cleo Madison in the five-reel pictures, "A Mother's Atonement" and "Lou of Loan Mountain."

He is five feet ten in height, one hundred fifty pounds, light complexion and hair and blue eyes.

ARTHUR MOON is the leading man of the Vogue-Kernan Company, and has had a varied experience in the theatrical field. He played with George Cohn's "The Southerner" and "The Honeymooners," with Wm. Morris in "The Cinderella Girl"; went over United time in the sketch, "Nightingale," was in stock five years with Willard Mack and Marjorie Rambeau, and has appeared on Pantages' vaudeville circuit.

His first work in pictures was for the Universal Company, where he remained eight months. January 1 he went to the Vogue, and has since played leading man parts in comedies for this company. Included in the releases to date are: "A Mix-Up in Photos," "Slipping It Over on Father," "The Delinquent Bridegrooms," and "Ten Thousand Bucks." Garden City, Kan., is the birthplace of Mr. Moon, and the important date, March 23, 1889. With one inch added to his heels he would measure six feet. He weighs one hundred and seventy pounds, has black hair and brown eyes. Mr. Moon attended school at Salt Lake City, Chicago, and Columbia University.

For Quality and Service

The Duplex Step Printer is a demonstrated success; every improvement that skill and ingenuity could suggest has been thoroughly tested and their merits ascertained, it being our ambition to place on the market a printer that would be thoroughly reliable, simple to install, convenient for operator and make a rock steady and sharp print, in fact getting every little detail of the negative, with little or no mechanical attention.

The Klieglight is easily portable and is particularly suited to motion picture studio work.

MISS BERGERE WILL VISIT THE DIRECTOR AT HIS OFFICE OR STUDIO, READ HIS SCENARIO, AND CONSULT WITH HIM REGARDING THE PRODUCTION

You can make more money

You may have a good location, a good theatre, and good attendance.

Yet we venture to say that you will not make the profit on 1916 business you expected to make.

A few years ago this business was a hit-and-miss affair. Today up-to-date theatres and modern methods make the exhibitor hustle for every nickel he takes in.

Is your profit all it ought to be? Have you stopped the leaks and losses that eat the heart out of your business?

The National Ticket-printing Register

Was built to help the wideawake exhibitor make more money.

It provides a printed record of every ticket sold. It prints its own tickets and issues them direct to the patron. It handles crowds quickly and relieves congestion at the ticket window.

Exhibitors all over the country tell us that the National Ticket-printing Register pays for itself out of what it saves and because of what it does.

What users endorse, it will pay you to investigate.

Think, plan, and decide now. Make more money in 1917 by putting a silent partner in your box office.

Gentlemen:

The new screen installed by you a few days ago at the Rialto Theatre hae proved to be a decided success and I am very much pleaeed, especially after the tremendous obstacles which you have surmounted to obtain thie splendid result.

The Strongest Indorsement in the World

And six reasons why you should buy a Minusa Gold Fibre Screen

1 Minusa Gold Fibre Screen is the only projection surface ever invented that will receive the shaft of light, absorb the contrary and jarring rays, form a perfectly neutral light and reflect to the audience, minus all eye-strain, the true picture with all the tone and feeling that was put into the original negative.

2 Minusa Cine Products Company are sole owners of the United States Patent No. 890,101, the basic patent on metallic coated screens. This means that all former and future purchasers of Minusa Screens will be afforded protection from any litigation or prosecution arising from infringement on this patent.

3 Minusa Gold Fibre Screen is the only custom made screen obtainable. Every detail of your theatre's dimensions and particular needs are studied and the finished screen conforms perfectly to these particular requirements. Every screen is tested under light before leaving the factory --- this is original with us.

4 Minusa Screens are built by the largest, most modern and completely equipped screen factory on earth (over 30,000 square feet of floor space), operated by the most efficient organization of screen-building experts that ten years of successful, continued effort have been able to assemble.

5 Minusa Screens are sold exclusively by over eighty per cent of the oldest and most reputable supply houses---and are installed in over ninety per cent of the finest and newest photoplay houses in America.

6 Minusa "Service Guarantee" insures maximum screen efficiency for five years --- not a mere guarantee against defects in workmanship and material, but an iron-clad agreement --- ask your dealer.

Mr. Exhibitor:

WE KNOW you are interested in improving your projection and we believe we can help you. Write us a letter containing the following information and we will tell you honestly if we can.

The Greater VITAGRAPH

Complete Program Now Available Through Vitagraph—V-L-S-E

GREATER Vitagraph aims not only to provide offerings that will outstrip the general output of the field, but, also, to supply exhibitors with a type of service which will make it easier and more profitable for them to operate their businesses.

As one of the preliminary steps in this direction, Vitagraph announces the release, through V-L-S-E of

THE BIG "V" COMEDIES

These are mints of merriment of one reel, featuring the famous Hughie Mack and his company of money-getting, crowd-winning cohorts, as well as other comedy stars of like drawing power—each film fully worthy of the Greater Vitagraph name.

The first of these releases, "Walls and Wallops," will be available on November 13, to be followed by one each week.

The release of these comedies through V-L-S-E now makes it possible for exhibitors to book through this organization, a complete program each week, including:

A Blue Ribbon Feature in Five or More Parts
A Super Serial in Two Parts
A Big "V" Comedy in One Part

Other short subjects will be added to this program, to the end that exhibitors may obtain with a single effort, an entire program of equal standard—that standard representing the apotheosis of photoplay production in all its phases.

"The Blue Envelope" was published serially in "The Woman's Home Companion," and was read by nearly three million people. Here is a mammoth ready-made audience, plus all who have since become interested in the story and the book, waiting only for the announcement of the picture.

Earle Williams and Edith Storey in a big moment of the eleventh episode

"The Scarlet Runner"

By C. N. & A. M. Williamson

Featuring

EARLE WILLIAMS

A 1200-Horse-Power Motor Series That Is Leading the Field

SCARCELY under way, Greater Vitagraph's Super-Serial starts off with a volume of business topping all previous high water marks.

The country-wide popularity of Earle Williams, the wide following of C. N. & A. M. Williamson, and the sweeping advertising and publicity campaign put back of this serial, account, in part, of course, for its phenomenal send-off.

Not a small measure of the splendid reception accorded the serial by exhibitors and public alike, however, has been due to the fact that the interest in "The Scarlet Runner" is sustained.

Exhibitors take no gamble, as in the instance of those serials where each episode is based on the preceding ones—there is no decrease in attendance after the first night or two.

Instead, with each episode completed—each containing stirring action—a mystery solved—a romance developed—each chapter will show an increase of from ten to fifteen per cent. over the preceding one.

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS 68 EXCHANGES

OCTOBER 28, 1916

Mutual Managers Are Always Ready To Aid Exhibitors

Real "service" is the prime motive underlying the success of the Mutual Film Corporation. No Mutual exchange manager is satisfied until his patrons are satisfied. No Mutual exchange manager feels that he has given a customer Mutual service when he gets his name on the dotted line of a contract and sees him leave for his theater with the day's "show" under his arm. He is just as much interested in that customer's box office as the exhibitor himself. He is willing and anxious to help each customer solve his problems. He is ready to consult with each exhibitor on the best way to advertise the films he is showing. He is prepared to offer the exhibitor helps of every kind.

By making the exhibitor's business better, the Mutual exchange manager knows he is making his own business better. The satisfied patron is the customer he wants. Unless the exhibitor is getting everything possible out of his theater there is, of course, room for improvement. And right there is where the manager of each Mutual exchange seeks to make himself valuable to his customers, for he is delighted to have the patrons of the exchange come to him for advice and help. More often than not he can solve their problems.

Gold and White Chosen As Mary Miles Minter Colors

Gold and white have been chosen as Mary Miles Minter's own colors.

Exhibitors are thus given an opportunity for creating attractive lobby displays and decorations. By using the Mary Miles Minter colors generously whenever they have a Minter picture on their screens, they can soon teach their patrons its meaning. Soon a mere glance at the front of a theatre will tell the regular patron that it is "Lovely Mary day" at that house.

Colleges and universities are known by their colors. Now the Mutual Film Corporation has given Mary Miles Minter a set of distinctive colors. Hereafter Miss Minter will be known as the "gold and white" girl. Any number of attractive lobby displays have been devised for Mary Miles Minter Gold and White days. They may be obtained at any of the Mutual's sixty-eight film exchanges.

Max Dill of Kolb and Dill and Miss Josephine Clarke were married at Los Angeles recently.

Next Chaplin on Nov. 13th

"Behind the Screen" is the title of the next Mutual-Chaplin Special feature. The release date is November 13. This date is two weeks later than the scheduled date, but the coming production is so stupendous and required so many special sets, that it was deemed best to postpone the release date and make the production one which will be talked about for months to come. It deals with life in a motion picture studio.

William Russell In "The Love Hermit" Released This Week

William Russell and Charlotte Burton are the stars of this week's Mutual Star Production. It is five reels in length. Its title is "The Love Hermit." It is a story of society and Big Business. Mr. Russell appears as Tom Weston, a stock broker in the office of James Bolton. Miss Burton is Marie Bolton, the daughter of Tom's employer.

Tom, after making his employer a fortune "on the street," is rewarded with an invitation to spend a week-end at the Bolton country home. There he meets Marie Bolton and the two are instantly attracted. A moonlight stroll ends in a proposal. Tom is enraptured to find Marie returns his love. Marie has another suitor in Jack Hillman. Hillman complains to Bolton that Marie is throwing herself away on Tom. A love scene between Tom and Marie is interrupted by Bolton and Hillman. Tom is rebuked and ordered out of the house. Marie spurns him publicly. He then becomes a woman hater.

Tom vows vengeance on all womankind, and ultimately he brings about the ruin of Bolton on Wall Street. The picture is one that presents William Russell at his best. Exhibitors all over the country have found the Russell Mutual Star Productions big money makers. This one is no exception to the rule. Bookings on "The Love Hermit" can be made at any of the sixty-eight Mutual film exchanges.

"The Undertow," A Powerful American Five-Reeler, Has An All-Star Cast

The American Film Company., Inc., presents on the Mutual Program this week an unusual five reel photoplay. It tells the story of an humble day laborer who rises to great wealth by might of intellect and will. His struggle is no easy one, for he is handicapped by a wife who is devoid of ambition. Franklin Ritchie and Helene Rosson have the leading roles. They are supported by a really all-star cast.

James King, by dint of study and industry, rises from the estate of a common day laborer to a position as the head of a huge felt hat factory. His wife is a constant handicap to him and he finally secures a divorce. Hammond, a foreman in the hat factory, mistreats the hands. Esther Mordon, a girl left suddenly penniless, becomes a toiler in the plant. When the employees threaten to strike against Hammond's tyranny, Esther appeals to King himself. Her sweetness and sympathy win his attention. Later Esther is the means of exposing Hammond as a thief. She foils his plot to burn the factory and ends the strike. King effects a change in working conditions and, having been won completely by Esther's shy mastery of him, declares his love for her. As the story ends Esther agrees to become Mrs. King.

The celebrated American photography was never more in evidence than in this five reel subject, "The Undertow." The picture can be seen and booked now at any of the sixty-eight Mutual exchanges.

TRIANGLE

RELEASES FOR WEEK OF OCTOBER 22

H. B. Warner in "The Vagabond Prince"

Kay-Bee

Little need be said of the popularity—and drawing power—of the TRIANGLE PLAYS in which H. B. Warner has starred. Most exhibitors know that the reputation which this star acquired on the stage has been more than lived up to on the screen.

And when you have seen "The Vagabond Prince" you will again see why this is true. You will understand the difference between this play and others. You will see why Warner can take the part of Prince or Indian beggar with equal success.

In this latest picture Warner does take the part of a foreign Prince who, tiring of the pomp and pettiness of his father's domain, ventures out in the great world to seek adventure and forget court etiquette. You'll enjoy it—and so will your patrons.

Norma Talmadge in "Fifty-Fifty"

Fine-Arts

A TRIANGLE PLAY with Norma Talmadge as the star is sure to be a success, and this latest picture is no exception. Based on the "sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander" idea and the necessity for compromise in a happy marriage this play is not a preachment. It moves along swiftly with a rapid-fire, deeply engrossing action that will appeal to every person who is married—or ever intends to be.

Keystone Comedies

Two as good as ever this week.

NORMA TALMADGE IN

Fifty-Fifty

FINE ARTS

She was an artists' model—young, pretty, fascinating. Full of energy and vivacity she delighted in playing near the fire without getting burnt. Then she fell in love and when she married she wanted to settle down, but her husband wouldn't, so they began to drift apart.

Your patrons will love this picture, and they'll tell their friends about it. Of course it's a TRIANGLE PLAY.

THE FABLE OF THE BIG HEAVY MAN AND THE SMALL HAPPY MAN

Written for Children but Exhibitors may read between the lines.

ONCE upon a time there was a big Impressive Man. His name was HEAVY FEATURES. "I will teach people the tragic lessons of Life," he said. "I will make them sad. I will make them think about the horrors of Crime and Poverty. I will make Pictures that will startle them and stir them up. They shall know how serious and complex Life is. They will call me an artist." And all the little Heavys struck heavy attitudes.

"Well, well," said the SMALL HAPPY MAN, "He has left out something. I will show people sunshine and laughter. I will make them glad. I will point out the bright spots in daily living. I will make Pictures that are clean and simple, I will make them funny. The people shall laugh. They will call me their friend because I make Life easier for them." The small Happy Man's name is CHRISTIE COMEDIES and he is constantly attended by a host of little Happys who are always glad.

Now the WISE OLD EXHIBITOR spoke: "People like to laugh," he declared, "they like to go home with a good taste in their mouths. They like CHRISTIE COMEDIES. He is the Thought Child of Al. E. Christie. I can get his Pictures on the Open Market from reliable Independent Exchanges. That lets me pick what I like — so he has to give me something good. I am going right now and book the Open Market release for October 30th, Billie Rhodes and Eddie Barry and Harry Ham are in it. It's called 'What's in a Name.'"

"SOMEWHERE IN GEORGIA" is not merely a vehicle for showing Ty Cobb to advantage. It is a big, vital, interesting story by and for red-blooded human beings; a story of love, ambition and the National Game.

Without Ty Cobb and Grant Rice it would be a big feature. With them it will be a record-breaker. Ty Cobb is not only the greatest ball player of all time but an accomplished actor as well.

Dear Mr. Hammons:

I cannot help but write and tell you of the general excellence of the pictures Mr. Bruce has taken. His peculiar temperament make him ideally fitted to take these pictures. His titles are as exhilarating as the pictures themselves and make an ideal combination.

I look forward to anything that Mr. Bruce sends and I have never yet had any reason to feel sorry or to regret having booked them. It doesn't make any difference who the exhibitor may be or what class of patrons he may be catering to, the pictures directed or taken by him will find an appreciation even in the illiterate and unsophisticated.

Theatres and their Admission Prices

WE have finally compiled some very interesting figures concerning motion picture theatres.

These were secured from a post card inquiry sent broadcast recently to the exhibitors of the United States and Canada.

The largest number of replies received to a single query was 2,528. It is regrettable that the response in general was not greater. However, the figures at hand will probably serve as a fairly accurate basis to compute with.

WE used the largest and most up-to-date list of theatres available embracing between sixteen and seventeen thousand names. If we take from this list the several thousand "floating" theatres—those constantly opened and closed by speculators whose activities not only enlarge lists beyond reason, but have done most to bring about among exchanges the cash in advance payment system—we may bring it down to fourteen thousand.

* * *

IN our own opinion it should be less than twelve thousand for all practical purposes of computation; however, with the consent of all we will go ahead on the basis of 14,000 theatres in the country.

2,528 replies give seating capacities of theatres as follows:

350 seats and under	1193
351 seats to 650	815
651 seats to 950	291
951 seats and over	229

or an average of 502 seats per theatre and a total of 1,269,117 seats in 2,528 theatres.

APPLYING these same figures to all the theatres of the country and taking their number at 14,000, we have, our motion picture theatres lined up, by seating capacity, as follows:

350 seats and under	6560
351 seats to 650	4482
651 seats to 950	1700
951 seats and over	1258

The total number of picture theatre seats, by this figuring, is 7,028,000. Filled on an average of twice a day this gives us a daily attendance at picture theatres of 14,056,000 people, if there are 14,000 active theatres.

PERHAPS the most striking fact in the above figures is the preponderance of small houses. Out of 14,000 theatres 11,042, or eighty per cent. of the total, are under 650 seating capacity. 6,560, or nearly half of all, are even under 350 seats.

In other words—the fact will bear repetition—every other picture theatre in this country and Canada, has less than a maximum of 350 seats. And the average seating capacity throughout the country is 502 seats.

On the other hand, while the proportion of large houses is low, only twenty per cent. of the total number of theatres, it is surprising to note that the past few years have produced nearly two thousand of what we may call large, modern theatres, of which—by our figuring—1,258 have even over 950 seats.

IT must be noted, however, that of these a number were not necessarily erected for pictures, but were built as vaudeville houses and now use pictures. For instance, another of our queries shows that out of 2,397 theatres, 242 or over ten per cent. run vaudeville from one to seven days a week.

* * *

AND now for that very important factor—prices of admission.

2188 theatres report on lower floor prices as follows:

5 cents	616
10 cents	1,247
15 cents	240
25 cents	85

914 theaters report as follows on upper floor prices:

5 cents	259
10 cents	566
15 cents	89

The average lower floor admission price then is a little more than ten and a half cents and the average upper floor price is a little more than nine cents. The general picture theatre admission price averages for the whole country almost exactly ten and a half cents.

THIS is striking evidence of the gain in admission prices. Three years ago a count would have shown undoubtedly the great prominence of the nickel house. It will be noted that over 57 per cent. of the theatres charge ten cents admission; and there are more than twice as many ten-cent houses as nickel theatres. The latter, indeed, are only two and a half times as many in number as the fifteen-cent houses.

But still more striking is the fact that the twenty-five-cent houses number only 85 out of 2,188, or less than 4 per cent of the total, making but one high-priced house among every twenty-five theatres.

WE present in these figures the first definite and authentic information thus far published, for the thoughtful analysis of those interested.

We shall have more to say in explanation of the above figures and still more figures to publish in connection with theatres, their capacities, locations, services, etc.

VOL. XIV October 28, 1916 No. 17

Self-Starting Censorship

THERE'S one town at least in these United States that has solved the censorship problem for itself.

This town shall be nameless—but its location will be given on request, if the inquirer promises not to cause any trouble by writing to the city officials and commenting on the enviable situation from the standpoint of the exhibitor. Here's how the town did it.

THE community had been ardent for censorship, and had appointed an official censor. Not having money for a projection room, and being really sensible and considerate, the officials planned that this woman should go around to the picture shows and judge them as they ran.

At first the woman was given power to stop the show and order the picture taken off.

BUT this was proved to the city officials to be an arbitrary and unjust procedure, disturbing to the public even more than to the exhibitor.

There was a board of reference, to which the pictures which the censor condemned were later shown—and in case of a condemned picture, two or three days had to elapse before the final decision could be given, besides the trouble of securing a reshowing by the exhibitor, or the reinstatement of parts she had ordered eliminated.

FINALLY this plan was worked out, to the satisfaction of all concerned: The censor visits the theatres as in the past, but makes no orders on the spot.

When she finds a picture that she believes is subject to criticism, she reports to the group of local business men who constitute the board of review. This board then, on the next showing of the picture, view it, and pass judgment. Their judgment is final, and the picture is cut or withdrawn, as they say.

THE most beautiful part of this procedure is that inevitably the opinion of the public enters into the matter. If the censor has herself condemned a picture, the attitude of the public becomes a factor to modify or endorse that condemnation; and the board of review actually does take cognizance of that public opinion.

Naturally, the exhibitor is always guided, first and last, by the judgment of his patrons—and if the patrons have expressed disapproval of a picture, he is the first to express the judgment of withdrawal, and the board of review has no chance at it.

Why Not Knight Urban?

THE Kinematograph, quoting a London newspaper, asks: "Who is the man who, according to a Sunday paper, is expected by the kinematograph industry to receive the honor of knighthood? A good many of us would like to know."

Why not Charles Urban? Mr. Urban is a motion picture pioneer of twenty-one years standing. Among his well-known services to the British trade and to Great Britain we may cite the following:

Organizer of the Urban Trading Company and producer of a great library of educational pictures; originator of the Kinemacolor and producer, at the demands of the king, of the remarkable color spectacles of the Durbar, the Coronation and the Investiture of the Prince of Wales; editor of the famous "Britain Prepared" picture, of which he made part of the army and all of the naval section; editor of the great "Battle of the Somme" picture, which he recently brought to this country.

From our side of the Atlantic Mr. Urban stands out quite distinctly, both as a patriot and as a cinematographer.

How Indianapolis Views the "No Children Admitted" Sign

AS further evidence of the disposition of the American Press toward the questionable picture and the "No Children Admitted" sign, we quote the Indianapolis News in a recent editorial, as follows:

"There will be general approval of the plan to extend the activities of the board of indorsers for junior motion pictures so as to take in the entire state. The movement, as developed in Indianapolis, seems to have passed the experimental stage, and it is gratifying that the board and the producers are working together more harmoniously. The aim is to promote the exhibition of clean pictures for children, and to this end it is planned to set aside Friday night of each week as "family night" in the various theatres. This has already been done by a number of Indianapolis theatres. The theatre managers contend that one of the difficulties hitherto encountered has been the absence of pictures in classes suitable for presentation to such audiences.

"IT is evident that, for the good of the business itself, serious attempts should also be made to improve the standard of the pictures ordinarily offered. Indianapolis should not have to witness the degrading spectacle, so often to be seen in other cities, such as Chicago, in which banners are draped across motion picture theatres warning the public that "No Children" are to be admitted. As a general thing, if a picture or an entertainment of any kind is unfit for children it should be regarded as unclean for adults.

"Fortunately, we have had comparatively little of this in Indianapolis. The theatre managers have sought to keep their programs clean, and, generally speaking, have succeeded in doing so."

Davison Contrasts English and American Film Markets

Open Market System Is the Only Way of Trading in Pictures There, Points Out British Agency Head, and Compactness of the Kingdom Enables Nearly Every Exhibitor to Get to Some Film Centre and See the Pictures at the Trade Showings—Distribution in England Largely a Gamble

THOMAS H. DAVISON, of Davison's Film Sales Agency of London, arrived in New York recently from the purpose of both buying and selling film. He has brought with him several pictures made by English manufacturers and hopes during the course of his visit to be able to purchase a number of pictures suitable for release in the English market.

Mr. Davison expressed himself as very interested in the series of articles started in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS of last week on the question of open and program booking. Being an Englishman he could not understand what was meant by the program system of booking, as everything in England is disposed of on the open market. His description of the English method of distribution for the light it throws on the practical application of the open market system is therefore of great interest.

"In England," he said, "everything is on the open market, and we believe that it is the only possible successful method for the distribution of pictures. The plan as it is in operation over there is practically the same as the booking system used for the varieties. There is this difference, however. Everything is done two months prior to the release date of the picture.

How It's Done in England

"For instance, we will say that a film buyer gets control of the British rights to a certain picture. He will take a sample print and announce a trade showing. This means that he will show this picture continuously in his private projection room until he has disposed of the London rights He either puts a price on it or takes the best price that is offered according to the quality of the picture.

"The film renters and exhibitors from all over London come into the projection room and look at the picture. When the London rights are disposed of prints are turned over to the travelers, as they are called, who journey to the surrounding centres such as Manchester, Birmingham, Glasgow, Dublin and so forth, and the same procedure is gone through. All of this work is done previous to the release of the picture, and this feature is one of the strongest of the whole system of distribution, for it gives the exhibitor not only a chance to see what he is booking but also gives him ample time to prepare his advertising campaign for the proper exploitation of the picture.

"The market for the short subjects is conducted much along the same lines. There are almost continuous trade shows, and in these the exhibitor sees every picture that he contemplates running in his house. If it is a feature he may arrange for it outright, if a short subject he goes to the film renter with whom he does business and books the offering at so much per foot.

"Owing to the geography of England, the fact that it is so easy for the exhibitor, with only a small loss of time, to come in to one of the centres and view his pictures before buying, and owing to the fact that trade showings are held two months before the release date, the open market works out most equitably for all concerned.

"Nevertheless picture distribution in England under this system is more or less of a gamble. One can never tell until a picture is actually put on view and the offers begin to come in whether it will be a success or failure from a financial standpoint. Personally I have had several pictures of which I thought very highly that I could not dispose of for love nor money. Others which I thought were very very bad I made money on. There is no definite scale of prices for features or exclusives, as we call them. It is a case of buyer and seller, the former trying to get the picture as cheaply as possible and the latter trying to obtain the highest price. Picture distribution is largely a matter of good salesmanship on the other side, more so, I think, than it is over here.

"Another factor that makes it very hard is the enormous quantity of pictures on the market. You must remember that the American manufacturer makes his product for distribution in twenty-one thousand theatres. Then when he is through over here that product is sent to England for distribution among four thousand theatres, as nearly eighteen hundred have been closed since the beginning of the war. This vast quantity of pictures on the market has a tendency to greatly lower the prices."

Mr. Davison then went on to give a few impressions of England under war conditions as applied to the picture business. "One of our greatest difficulties," he said, "is keeping the film in decent condition. There are no men, of course, and most of the operators in the theatres are girls and women. Of course they are inexperienced and the film suffers. They are getting a lot better, however.

War Affects Exhibitions

"Another thing is the lack of light. The streets are absolutely dark. The only sign by which a picture theatre can be told at night is a small dark blue electric bulb. This and the tax is a great handicap to business. The Zeppelins also are affecting business; in fact I should say they are one of the picture shows greatest competitors at the present time. As soon as the people know that there is a "Zepp" raid they flock out into the streets keen on taking in a free show. There is no chance of getting them in the theatre while the Germans are performing for them in the air.

"When the war is finished there will be renewed activity on the part of the English manufacturers, and I believe that they will earnestly seek the American market. The only reason they cannot produce now is the lack of labor, as all of the dark room hands are at the front fighting. As soon as the war is over, however, and these men return there will be greatly renewed activity among the English producers."

NEW YORK OFFICE OF GREAT NORTHERN IS DISCONTINUED

The Great Northern Film Company, which was established in New York in 1908 as the American office of the Nordisk Films Company, Copenhagen, has decided to temporarily discontinue its office in the United States for reasons which may be laid down to the conditions created by the European conflict.

The company, shortly before the outbreak of the war, had contemplated the establishing of an American studio, and a general expansion of its interests in the American market, but has found it impossible to carry out its plans as originally intended. The regular releasing schedule has been affected more or less during the past year or more, and until these conditions subside, the company has decided to discontinue releasing its product regularly as heretofore.

Ingvald C. Oes, general manager, contemplates a trip to Copenhagen just as soon as pending business matters of the office are sufficiently adjusted. He will appoint a representative to look after the interests of his concern, and to arrange for the release of several of the company's big six and seven-reel special features.

LEHRMANN TO MAKE COMEDIES FOR FOX

It is reported that Henry M. Lehrmann, formerly president of the L-Ko Comedy Company, will make comedies for William Fox at the west coast studios of the Fox Film Corporation.

Mr. Lehrmann has been in New York for a week negotiating, according to rumor, with the Fox forces, and left for Los Angeles October 12.

Annette Kellermann in the Title Role of "The Daughter of the Gods," with Some of the Elaborate Harem Scenes That Characterize the Big Fox Feature Which Opens at the Lyric Theatre, New York, October 17

"CHAPERON" SCENES COMPLETED FOR ESSANAY

All scenes have been completed for "The Chaperon," five-act Essanay feature and the play will be released through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service on November 20.

The final scenes were photographed at Green Bay, Wis., where Edna Mayo, Eugene O'Brien and Sydney Ainsworth participated in the doubtful fun of tipping over canoes and falling into water just above the freezing point. At one point when they showed a reluctance to accomplish the trick, Director Arthur Berthelet caught one end of a canoe, just out of camera range, and hurled its occupants into the water, getting the desired effect.

The whole company enjoyed partridge shooting, the season having just opened, with honors going to Sydney Ainsworth. Mr. Ainsworth is a native of Wisconsin and goes after partridges every year.

"The Chaperon" is taken from the stage hit of Maxine Elliot. Edna Mayo appears in the title role with Eugene O'Brien as the chief support. Sydney Ainsworth takes the heavy lead.

QUIRK ELECTED PRESIDENT OF NEW YORK SCREEN CLUB

National politics were laid aside at the Screen Club, New York City, on October 7, while club members watched for the outcome of a hotly contested election of their own. The following returns were made public at midnight: Billy Quirk, president; Edwin Carew, first vice president; Paul Scardon, second vice-president; Oscar Eagle, third vice-president; Anthony Kelly, corresponding secretary; Robert E. Welsh, recording secretary; Will C. Smith, treasurer.

Four members were elected to fill vacant positions on the Board of Governors. These were E. K. Lincoln, William Haddock, Frank Carroll and Harry Solter.

Triangle Rumors Set at Rest by Griffith, Ince and Sennett

"If You Have Heard That Productions Made at Our Studio Are Not to Go Through Our Releasing Organization, You Have Been Misinformed," Says Ince

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, Oct. 14.

UPON the return of D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, who have been absent from their respective studios in Los Angeles from five weeks to four months, all rumors concerning the future of the Triangle were put at rest by their respective statements.

Mr. Ince, who has been absent from the coast the longest, he having gone East prior to the New York premier of "Civilization," in speaking of his masterpiece, stated that practically all state rights territories have been disposed of, there being a few states of unimportant locations yet to be sold.

When he first fixed a price for state rights, he placed them at what he thought were extremely high figures, but the success of the picture has been such that in practically all cases the rights for the film have been sold according to his original estimates, or ones even higher. He has several big ideas in mind for future multiple reel subjects to serve in such houses as are now showing "Civilization," but he does not plan to begin work on another Ince feature until he has had sufficient time to thoroughly familiarize himself with the conditions at the studio as they now exist. Many changes have been made at the plant since he left, and the most perfect producing studio on the coast has been completed during his absence.

"If you have heard stories that productions made at this studio are not to go through the Triangle releasing organization, you have been misinformed," Mr. Ince said. "There have been no grounds for such rumors. It has been decided that in the future any exhibitor can book any subject from the program without taking all the other releases. This concession will make all subjects of the program more popular, as it makes it possible for every exhibitor to secure our subjects without making a long term contract."

Mack Sennett was equally as emphatic concerning the Keystone comedies being released through the Triangle Corporation. In addition Mr. Sennett said: "One-reel comedies will be made by us in the future for the regular service to the exhibitor with feature subjects. The rental of Keystone two-reel comedies will be unrestricted." Mr. Sennett emphasized the fact that he believes the Triangle Corporation is in a more prosperous condition than ever, and doing the greatest volume of business possible.

Mr. Griffith returned home a day or two later, and after being in Los Angeles for twenty-four hours in which he gave practically all of his time to personally supervising the plans of the premier of "Intolerance," went to San Francisco on the same mission. In speaking of the Triangle Corporation, he stated that he knew very little about it, because his time in New York had been practically all taken up with matters pertaining to the presentation of "Intolerance" there. In this connection he said: "I know very little about the Triangle, for I have only made two pictures, and they have been my own. The Fine Arts studio will continue making Triangle pictures, but with that I have personally nothing to do."

Mr. Griffith did not make any statement concerning his plans for the future, he stating he had nothing in view to do except see that "Intolerance" is properly presented here.

Following the showing of "Intolerance," he announces he will take a long vacation.

Open Booking or the Program—Which?—III

Majority of Exhibitors in Michigan Favor the Program, But See Menace to Their Interest in the Sudden Shifting of Stars to Other Companies After the Theatre Is Pledged to Use a Certain Service—"Up to the Exhibitor to Decide," Says Kunsky; "Open Booking Inevitable Development"—Ingersoll

By Al Thornburg

THE more I talk with exhibitors and exchanges throughout the State of Michigan the more I am firmly convinced that the open b oking policy is feasible, logical and practical only with a few week-stand theatres and on possibly two or three nights a week of theatres that are playing a policy of daily change. Where you find an exhibitor who does favor open booking, he will admit when you corner him that he would not want it seven nights a week but for one or two nights, three nights at the most, out of each week.

The open booking policy is not one that even exhibitors have asked for, but a policy that has really been forced upon them by the new method of distribution. Exhibitors seem unanimous in saying this—that if manufacturers continue to take their best stars off the regular program or if the stars themselves leave the regular program to form individual companies they are going to force many of the exhibitors out of business; for one thing they are going to disorganize the entire motion picture industry, for a second thing, they are forcing exhibitors to establish an open booking policy.

Exhibitors would much prefer to have the stars stay on the regular program—because they can see no advantage to the exhibitor to have the stars on individual programs, which cost considerably more. Another thing, the individual star program is simply a case of getting all the exhibitors in one town together to see who is willing to pay the most for it. The writer has talked with numerous exhibitors who say they have kept away from the exchanges that are exploiting individual stars because at the present high film rentals they would not book them for the simple reason that they cannot bring any greater profit to the theatre than a good picture at a low rental on the regular program.

Open Bookings Not Favored

The writer can say frankly, and only after a thorough investigation, that the open booking policy or the policy of putting out stars on individual programs, is not meeting with the approval of the majority of exhibitors. They do not like the idea at all—but many of them are signing up for fear that their nearest competitor might sign up for the service. And another thing, the stars themselves who are forming individual companies are being "panned" by exhibitors because they feel that the stars are getting all the money out of the motion picture business, and that if anything the exhibitor is getting less of it than he formerly did because of the competition and the increasing cost of doing business. When exhibitors ask the exchange managers of these individual producing companies why they have to pay more, invariably they get this response:

"We have to pay Miss So-and-So four times what we used to. In other words, the exhibitor is really the goat. As one exhibitor said: "The stars are getting immensely rich on the exhibitor, while the exhibitor, if anything, is making less money than ever before. Why don't the stars and the producers do something to increase the profit of the exhibitors, because surely if the exhibitor does not make a profit he cannot stay in business."

This article has been written from the standpoint of the smaller exhibitor, and those in the outskirts, more than from the standpoint of the large downtown theatres in metropolitan cities. These large theatres have things pretty well their own way and can do things that the small exhibitor and the outskirt exhibitor cannot do.

What John H. Kunsky Says

"As I see this proposition, it's really up to the exhibitor himself to decide. If he thinks he can't make money by an open booking policy, he should make all program bookings, but on account of the increasing number of film productions being put on the market and the uncertainty of the business itself, the uncertainty as to how long stars are going to remain with the old companies, exhibitors themselves are really in a quandary, and unless they have a few open nights they will not be able to book the big pictures that are being sold off the regular program. With some of our theatres we have found the program booking policy to be very successful, although during the past few months there has been a tendency to open booking just because new stars were springing up right along and we had no assurance as to how long stars who were box office attractions would remain on the regular program.

"The action of Many Pickford, Clara Kimball Young, Kitty Gordon, Norma Talmadge and others to form companies of their own has naturally put a scare into the regular program booking. If we knew positively that certain stars would remain on certain programs, then we would go out and select our program and feel assured that we would get those stars by signing up with certain producers. The chaotic state of things for the past few months and the constant rumors of changes, mergers, etc., has kept the exhibitor constantly on edge, and you can hardly blame him for favoring the open booking policy, but keep the stars on the regular programs and exhibitors will forget open booking.

"Since adopting the open booking policy for the Barden, Empress, Liberty and Royale Theatres, we have done better business than we did with program bookings. Nevertheless, I do not want to advocate an exclusive open booking policy for all houses; it's up to each exhibitor to find out what is best for his particular locality. Exhibitors might find it better to split their week in half, running program booking one-half and open booking the remainder of the week."

Speaking for the larger cities, Mr. Kunsky contends that there is really a field for both methods of booking—the program and open booking. Some theatres will find the program more successful, while there are unquestionably houses that can do better business with maintaining a strictly open booking policy. He reiterates that it is really up to each exhibitor to study his locality and retain which ever policy that seems to work out most satisfactorily. Both policies unquestionably have their good and bad features.

Comments by Frederick Ingersoll

"The open booking policy is to my mind the inevitable development of the motion picture industry," says Frederick Ingersoll, of the Knickerbocker Theatre, the big East End house. I don't mean to say by this that programs are to disappear but I do infer that the picture manufacturers, including some who oppose the plan, are primarily responsible for it.

"The ideal in picture theatre management—the residential district house—would be for the manager to arrange for seven releases each week on seven programs and to sit back and have the output of the world's best studios with the best actors and the best plays. The trouble is a manager can't do it. Actors do not remain with the same companies. Producers do not make a consistent program of releases that stand up with each other. Sometimes the vehicles employed are unworthy of the stars. They may fall down on direction or photography. I have just cancelled one program because every other picture made by this corporation is notoriously weak.

"Stars are leaving the big companies and are being used for special releases, in some instances the officers of the program companies being interested in these special features. In other words the drawing power of these stars is so great that these producers feel they can make more money. This naturally compels the house manager to leave a few days open each week, else he has no place for Mary Pickford, Clara Kimball Young and others that are coming out with special releases. He must have the features made independently of the program if he wishes to hold up the theatre standard. And the special releases are pictures he would play. It's better to spend more for Mary Pickford than to pay less for a regular release and not give satisfaction.

"Personally I regret the open booking policy or that we have to come to it, but there seems no way out. Every little while some program release is a suggestive picture that can't be shown to women and children. We must pay for it, according to contract, but we go into the open market for a substitute. With poor and weak pictures I am compelled to take the same course. The program makers have their side to this and I know that good pictures must be assured of a good market, yet, eventually, the time will come when the program people will permit the house manager to eliminate some of their releases from his program because of local conditions, without charging him for it. In other words pictures may be very successful on Monroe avenue in Detroit and yet be wholly wrong for my territory."

C. A. McVicker Talks

Charles A. McVicker, general manager of the William F. Klatt chain of theatres in Detroit, does not believe in a seven-day open booking arrangement, but does contend that it is best to keep a few nights open at each house for special things that may come along, especially at a time like now when there are so many changes being made. The fact that Mr. McVicker has signed up with one concern to play its features one entire week at the new Regent theatre is best proof that he does not favor open booking. He says that open booking causes too much bidding for pictures because usually the exchange man gives his features to whoever will pay the most in each locality,

Eddie Murphy, manager of the Gladwin Park theatre, Detroit, says that it would be almost impossible for an exhibitor with a daily change in a neighborhood section to play an open booking policy the entire week. "I wouldn't think of wildcatting seven days a week," he said. "At present, I have only one night of the week open and I use it for rebooking pictures or geting something special that comes along. I have the Paramount, Triangle, Fox and Metro features that consume six nights a week, and I feel that I am getting a fine assortment of pictures, the best stars and good service. I would not want to change. Like all other exhibitors, the thing that is somewhat worrying me is—how long will all of the stars on the present programs remain there.

"If we work up a big clientele on Douglas Fairbanks, for instance, and he leaves the Triangle to go with some company with whom he are not booking, where do I stand and what should I do? Sign up with the company that he goes with, which would probably mean that I would have to cancel something else? If the producers will keep their stars on the regular program, the exhibitor who signs up with that particular company will not find fault."

Views of a Film Exchange Representative

R. Von der Goltz, who has been representing several film exchanges through Michigan, writes:

"In traveling through the State of Michigan, I have received many inquiries as to the opinion of various exhibitors regarding the holding open of one day each week for booking independent productions. The majority of exhibitors catering to high-class patronage favor independent bookings, claiming it gives a greater variety of attractions, creates more publicity, keeps the patrons interested and improves the standard of their theatre.

"There are a few who claim they are now doing a capacity business and that their admission business can not be increased, that they would not want to increase their prices and naturally to pay the increased rental for the independent features would only result in a loss of profit, even though they packed them in and even turned people away. Of course, the fear that the opposition house might get the independent attractions forces the high-class theatre to contract for them first, and only the future will tell whether these open bookings will remain with the business.

"They must be give a thorough experiment first. I find that many managers of high-class theatres are preferring the policy of open booking because they want the big features and find that they can't get them unless they have an open booking policy at least for part of each week. If the exhibitor books a solid program seven days a week and then sees a big feature that he would like to play, he must put some picture on the shelf and pay for it, which means a double expense. As long as producers release big features there will be a tendency to keep some nights of each week open."

The Majestic theatre, one of Detroit's largest, most beautiful and most popular playhouses, has played a policy of contract booking ever since it opened.

This is probably the best indication that open booking is not in favor at this house.

PECK IS NOT INTERESTED IN GENERAL FILM

The Melies Manufacturing Company desires to deny an article recently appearing in several trade papers reporting that Fred S. Peck, a Boston woolen man, had bought into the General Film Company through this company.

Nor is it true that the Eastern Film Corporation of Providence, R. I., is in any way connected with the Melies Company.

The only grounds for such a rumor is the fact that the Vim Film Corporation, manufacturers of Vim comedies which are released by us on the General Film Program, recently assigned its contract with us to a corporation called the Amber Star Film Corporation, of which Mr. Mark M. Dintenfass is president and Mr. Louis Burstein is vice-president, and control the management thereof.

Messrs. Dintenfass and Burstein were and are the sole owners of the Vim Film Corporation. We understand, however, that Mr. Peck has some interest in the Amber Star Film Corporation and hence this rumor.

The Melies Manufacturing Company's activities comprise far more than Vim comedies. It releases on the General Film Program, Knickerbocker Star Features, consisting of two-reelers and three-reelers released alternately each week. These are produced under the supervision of H. M. and E. D. Horkeimer and it is obvious that Mr. Peck or Mr. Dintenfass or Mr. Burstein have no interest in them whatsoever.

Mr. Paul G. Melies, president of the Melies Manufacturing Company, is also a director and treasurer of the General Film Company and active in its affairs and administration.

LULE WARRENTON TO MAKE JUVENILES IN LANKERSHIM

Lule Warrenton, for several years associated with the Universal in the capacity of character actress, and later placed in charge of producing juvenile pictures in which practically all the players were children, has left the Universal and organized a company financed by Lankershim business men.

It is planned to make child pictures, and a plant for this is being constructed in Lankershim. The first picture to be made is "The Bird's Christmas Carol."

WILLIS GOES TO AUSTRALIA

Lloyd D. Willis, assistant general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, is on his way to Australia, sailing from San Francisco October 17. Mr. Willis, in addition to making a general survey of the field in the interests of William Fox, will supervise the premiere of the Kellermann feature, "The Daughter of the Gods," which it is expected will take place about December 1.

Pathe Acquires Rights to New Toning Process

Combination Toning Method, Devised by F. W. Hochstetter, Permits Graduation of From Five to Ten Tones by Treatment of Ordinary Black and White Negative—Special Expedition Embarks on Eighteen Months' Trip to Cover the Whole of the United States—Westgard, President of National Highways Association Will Be in Charge

PATHE has acquired the exclusive rights to a series of pictures treated by a new process of combination toning, invented by F. W. Hochstetter and known as the Hochstetter process of combination toning, which it is confidently expected will revolutionize present methods.

The pictures which will be made under this new process will consist of a series of the scenic wonders of the United States under the general title of "Know America, the Land We Love," and will be released weekly on the Pathe Program. Pathe has paid a greater price for these pictures than for any that go to make up their regular weekly program in pictures of this class.

A special expedition will start from Trinidad, Colo., Tuesday, October 17, which will be gone about a year and a half. During that time it will cover the whole of the United States photographing every scene that is either beautiful from a scenic standpoint or interesting historically.

This expedition will be in charge of A. L. Westgard, president of the National Highways Association, known as "The Man of Many Miles," and will be taken in direct co-operation with the Department of the Interior of the Federal Government. Every facility of this department will be put at the disposal of Mr. Westgard and his cameraman. The expedition will travel entirely in two Paige automobiles, one of which will be used for the members of the party, and the other for their camp equipage.

A new company called Combitone Pictures, Inc., with a paid in capital of $200,000 will be formed and legally incorporated during the course of the next week or two for the taking and manufacture of these pictures. F. W. Hochstetter and A. L. Westgard, president of the National Highways Association, are the moving spirits in this new organization.

Five to Ten Tones Possible

The new process with which the ordinary black and white negative is treated permits of a gradation of color tone to the extent of from five to ten tones on each inch of film. The first requisite is great care in the developing whereby the graduations between the blacks, dark grays, grays, light grays and whites are made very distinct. The film is then put through a special toning bath, which causes the various tones of the color used to automatically register in direct ratio to the density of the film. In other words, the tonal degree is manifested according to the deepness with which the exposure has registered on the silver of the emulsion. There is only the one toning bath which is a combination of a toning and tinting solution. The result is marvelously and wonderfully beautiful.

The marvel of the process is that the colors in bright light and in shadow register in the same tones in which they are seen in nature, and do not change to a different color as so frequently happens. In the picture shown to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS there was evident eight different tones of the same colors. There was one scene in particular showing a herd of moose fording a river at sunrise. The bright orange of the direct rays of the sun was brighter than the reflection in the water.

Then there was the bright green of the nearby foliage, and the darker green of the trees in the background. This process is not to be mistaken for color photography, for it is not and makes no claims to such. It is merely a combination process of tinting and toning whereby the natural gradations of the tones in the black and white are transferred when the film is toned and tinted to the colors. This selective gradation of color tone, however, is such a vast improvement over the present methods of tinting and toning that at times one almost believes that it is natural color photography. The result is that the pictures treated by this process have the most beautiful color effects of any that have been publicly thrown on the screen up to the present time.

Taylor Will Be Cameraman

E. C. Taylor will be the cameraman of the expedition that will start this week. He is well known in camera circles, and has been "shooting" for over nine years. The business manager of the new company is Julius E. Timer, who also acts as personal representative for Mr. Hochstetter in his numerous other activities. Mr. Timer is well known in producing circles, having for the past nine years been connected with Biograph, Universal and the American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company. He is also at present connected with the Ideal Laboratories with which Mr. Hochstetter has recently become connected, and where all of the technical work on Combitone pictures will be performed.

University Graduate and Former Football Star Charged by General with Purchase of Stolen Film

IT is not often that an alleged theft of film from an exchange attains the distinction of having a university graduate and famous football player involved as an admitted purchaser of the stolen property, although he stoutly denied knowledge of the fact that the film was stolen when he agreed to buy it. However that may be, John Van Arman, a widely known film exchange man of Syracuse, was arrested recently on a charge of having bought stolen property, in that he purchased a film stolen from General Film Company (Inc.) exchange at Syracuse.

The Syracuse Herald, reporting the case, had this to say:

"John Van Arman, former Syracuse University football star, was arrested by Detective Thomas J. Lynch late yesterday afternoon, charged with criminally receiving stolen property.

"Van Arman, the police say, bought a moving picture film from a sixteen-year-old boy who had stolen it, according to the boy's confession, from the General Film Company with offices at 445 South Warren street.

"The police charge that Van Arman, who conducted a film exchange at 551 South Salina street, bought several other films which he knew, the police say, had been stolen from the General Film Company by boys employed there.

"Van Arman admits having bought the film the police specifically charge him with, but denied knowing it was stolen.

"The football star's arrest came as the result of an investigation covering a period of nearly two weeks. The film company's offices were broken into by burglars, and afterwards an inventory was taken which showed that a dozen films or more were missing from stock.

"Van Arman was graduated from Syracuse University in 1910 and was prominent in college athletics. He was center on the university football team for a number of seasons, and played in the outfield of the baseball team."

Van Arman, after the first police investigation, was paroled by Chief of Police Cadin, but afterwards was re-arrested on a warrant sworn out by an attache of General Film Company office at Syracuse. Later he was released on bail pending a presentation of the circumstances attending the theft and sale of this film by the grand jury.

It is charged and will be brought out at Van Arman's trial, if he is brought to trial on a grand jury indictment, that many film exchanges in northern New York have been systematically robbed recently, the thieves apparently being satisfied that they could dispose of all films they stole.

There was powerful influence brought to bear, looking toward the abandonment of the charge preferred against Mr. Van Arman, but General Film Company determined to put a stop for all time to thieving, at its Syracuse branch at least, insisted that the charge be pressed.

The two young men formerly employed by General Film Company at Syracuse, charged with theft, are still in jail. They will be called as witnesses if the charges against Van Arman are upheld by the grand jury.

PRICE OF ROTHACKER BOOK IS FIFTEEN CENTS

The price of the memorandum book for cameramen, being issued by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, is 15 cents, and not 75 cents, as erroneously printed in a recent issue.

WOMEN PLAN NEIGHBORHOOD CENSORSHIP

Now that the official censorship of moving pictures at San Francisco is a thing of the past the question of securing better shows in neighborhood houses is being taken up by women's clubs in various parts of the city. At a meeting held a short time ago in the Sunset District, one of the most thickly populated sections of the city, it was decided that one of the most effective ways of securing programs to their liking would be to get into close touch with exhibitors and indicate to them the class of productions they would most like to see. It was proposed that they ask to be allowed to compile a program for Friday evenings, when their children would be permitted to attend, and that pending the education of producers along the line of making better pictures they allow their children to patronize moving pictures on Friday nights only.

THIRD CONVENTION OF FOX MANAGERS NEXT WEEK

The third annual convention of the Fox Exchange managers will be held at the Hotel Biltmore, New York City, October 23 to 29, inclusive. Details of the program will be announced later.

Pathe News Makes Record Showing Submarine Film

On Monday, October 9, at Nine o'Clock, Scenes of Survivors Rescued from Vessels Sunk by U-53 Off Newport, R. I., Were Shown at Strand and Other Theatres

THE Pathe News on Monday, October 9, at 9 P. M. was showing to the audiences of the Strand, Keith's Palace, Broadway and Loew's theatres, New York City, scenes of the survivors rescued from the vessels sunk by the German submarine U-53, off Newport, R. I. The survivors were landed at Newport on Monday morning by the U. S. torpedo boat destroyers which had rescued them. A Pathe News cameraman, sent to Newport on Sunday night when the story was first flashed over the wires, was awaiting them, secured his pictures and then rushed them to Jersey City by special messenger.

At Jersey City they were developed, cut, printed and titled at top speed. Prints were delivered before 9 o'clock the same day to the New York theatres showing the News and special messengers were sent with them to Boston and Philadelphia. In consequence, according to the testimony of the various theatre managers who received the pictures, the Pathe News scored a clean beat. Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand theatre said: "Pathe is to be congratulated on its enterprise in getting out these pictures so quickly."

The management of Keith's Palace, America's greatest vaudeville theatre, said: "Pathe scored again. They beat the town with these pictures." Stanley Mastbaum of Philadelphia, said: "The first pictures in Philadelphia of the submarine survivors and the World's series baseball game were shown at the Stanley and Palace theatres. Pathe News service cannot be beaten."

Such speed and smoothness of co-operation between the different departments almost approaches the feats of the newspapers themselves in getting out their extras, despite the fact that unlike news, films cannot be carried over the wires.

Only the day before the Pathe News had accomplished another "scoop." Pictures of the first World's Series baseball game at Boston on Saturday were delivered in Jersey City the same night, and were shown in the most prominent New York, Boston and Philadelphia theatres on Sunday. In New York, Keith's Palace, Proctor's, Loew's and the Strand were among those showing them; in Philadelphia the Stanley and the Palace; in Boston the Orpheum, St. James and Fenway.

Manager Vic Morris of the Orpheum and St. James theatres, Boston, reports large houses to see Pathe's baseball pictures and says his patrons were very much surprised and pleased at the rapidity with which the game had been brought to the screen. Manager Stanton of the Fenway theatre of Boston, says: "Pathe put over a big one on the World's Series,"—that the pictures were the big drawing card of his show and brought much applause. Manager Newhall of the Strand theatre in Lynn, Mass., reports that the pictures were a big success and that his patrons were much pleased.

It goes without saying that the theatres showing these timely and interesting pictures were able to "pack them in" by means of special posters. The Pathe Exchanges in New York, Philadelphia and Boston, under the direction of Business Manager Seelye, gave immediate and efficient co-operation in order to "put the thing over" properly in each instance.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, summed it all up when he said: "News events like those of the submarine survivors and World's Series baseball games rival in drawing power in the motion picture theatres the best features, especially when they are put out as quickly as these. We are making special efforts to see that our news pictures are delivered to the exhibitor as soon as possible after the event.

"Our many successes along these lines is most gratifying to me, for I am a firm believer in the value to the exhibitor of the Pathe News. Our long experience in news films, for ours was the first, has enabled us to eliminate waste motion until now feats that would have been a seven day's wonder a year or so ago are of almost weekly occurrence. We expect, however, to do even better in the future."

"Twenty Thousand Leagues" Is Shown in Chicago

Dailies Speak of It as "the Greatest Evening of Cinema Ever Offered in the History of the Art"—A Thrill in All the Nine Hundred Feet

Chicago, Oct. 14.

JULES VERNE'S most picturesque hero, Captain Nemo, and his submarine that terrorized the ocean fifty years ago as told in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," appeared for the first time on a screen at the Studebaker theatre, Chicago, last week while the German U boats were duplicating the story in reality off the American coast.

Crowds began to arrive at Jones, Linick and Schaefer's Studebaker before sundown only to find every seat in the house sold. When the doors opened a squad of police had to be called to clear Michigan boulevard. The same was true at the first matinee on Tuesday and since then hundreds have been turned away at every perforance.

The Chicago Tribune said the Universal had the Kaiser for a press agent and the Chicago American declared this submarine photo-drama to be the "greatest evening of cinema ever offered in the history of the art," adding that "anyone who missed seeing it would be in the class with the visitor to Niagara who didn't see the Falls." Chicago papers speak of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" as the Universal's wonder picture. It was filmed at the bottom of the ocean by the inventions of the Williamson brothers, who have solved the secret of ocean photography. President Carle Laemmle of the Universal, with J. Ernest Williamson, saw the first performance.

There is a thrill in almost every foot of the 900 scenes in this submarine play. Captain Nemo proves to be the mighty wizard of the deep that Jules Verne made him, and the wonders of ocean depths viewed through the magic window in his submarine Nautilus reveal an enchanting panorama, which, the Chicago Post says, defies the "most superlative adjectives to describe."

High Admission Price Charged by Australians

"Exhibitors Are Able to Meet the Big Cost of Film and Heavy Duties, Though Capacity Business Is Not the Continuous Rule," Says Hellmrich, Here to Buy Pictures for His Market—He Regulates Rentals According to Size of the Theatres

A. B. HELLMRICH, general manager for the Co-operative Film Exchange, Limited, of Australia, left for home October 17, after a two month visit in New York for the purpose of purchasing film for the Australian, New Zealand, and East Indian market. During this time he was able to close several very favorable contracts giving him the rights to the product of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, B. S. Moss, and the Al Christie comedies.

Just previous to his departure Mr. Hellmrich had a number of interesting things to say to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS relative to the picture situation in Australia and judging from the way things are conducted in the far off antipodes the Australian exhibitor not only has nothing to learn from his American countertype, but can teach him a number of new wrinkles that would have an immediate effect on his box office returns.

The two outstanding features of his remarks were relative to the size of the theatres and the admission prices obtained. "Most of our theatres," he said, "have a seating capacity of from two to four and five thousand, and whereas they are not filled to capacity every night in the week, they are comfortably filled during the week and on Fridays and Saturdays filled to capacity. The prices prevalent throughout Australia are ten, twenty-five, and fifty cents. So that even though capacity business is not the continuous rule still at these prices the exhibitor can overcome to a large extent, the high cost of film and the exceedingly heavy duty.

American Exhibitor Behind Australian Manager

"The American exhibitor is far behind those of Australia in the methods used to exploit the pictures. We realize perfectly that no amount of money is too large to spend for the proper exploitation of a picture, for every penny of it will come back two, three and four times over. Consequently we use the newspapers very extensively taking full pages of space at the regular rates.

"This is a comparatively recent innovation of mine and I have found through actual experience that it explodes the theory of a neighborhood house. Just as a concrete example let me cite Melbourne. The pictures which I control are first shown in the Melbourne houses of our circuit for one week. Then we control a large number of theatres in all of the outlying suburbs, some six or seven in number. We advertise the first showing of a picture extensively in the Melbourne newspapers, then the following week we advertise that same picture in the Melbourne newspapers as showing at the suburban houses, and those who were not fortunate enough to see the picture when it was shown in Melbourne go out to the suburbs.

"People will travel any distance to see a good picture, if you will only let them know where it is to be seen. Previous to this our suburban houses were distinctively neighborhood houses. Now they have all of Melbourne and all of the surrounding territory to draw upon for their audiences. This plan of advertising our attractions for the suburban theatres to the extent of a full page in the city papers has completely changed the character of our houses.

Originality the Keynote of Advertising

"We try to make originality the keynote in all of our advertising whether it be in the newspapers, on the hoardings, or in the special booklets we get out descriptive of the attractions which we plan showing. It is seldom that we do the same thing twice alike. There is a variety to our newspaper copy, an originality to our hoardings and distinctiveness in the special booklets. Some of these latter run into large sums of money owing to the fine quality of paper used and the artistic richness of the printing but we feel that ever cent put into them comes back into the box office in greatly increased ratio.

"My own particular system of distribution is co-operative and non-profit making pure and simple. It is the object of my company to put all of its money into film and not into dividends. Of course this is a peculiar arrangement as the company is made up of the exhibitors using its service and the profits are taken in through the box offices of the individual theatres while the expenses of booking are practically shared pro rata. I believe this to be the best system that has ever been devised.

"There is practically no such thing as open booking or open market in Australia. Everything is done on the program basis and we find this the most effective method that could be devised for us. We know the picture which we will receive long in advance and can make our arrangements accordingly. The plan works out in one respect totally different from the way it is handled in this country. There is no such thing as a universal price. It is an individual arrangement between the distributor and the exhibitor all governed by the size of the theatre, its average gross receipts, and the size of the territory which it has to draw upon. This is fair and equitable to every one concerned.

"The theatre with a seating capacity of five thousand should certainly pay more for its service than one only seating one thousand just the same as a theatre in a city with a population of one hundred thousand should pay more than a theatre in a city of one thousand. I never make a booking without first seeing the theatre, going over its books to some extent, and obtaining an idea of its average gross income, and then make it a price in proportion to the size and the income.

These are policies based on sound business principles and for that reason they have proven successful."

Shortly after his return to Australia Mr. Hellmrich is planning an extensive trip covering most of the Indian Empire, as he believes that there is a big opportunity in developing this market with its millions of potential picture fans.

S. Rankin Drew Goes to Rolfe After the 28th

Son of Sidney Drew, the Parlor Comedy Laughmaker of Metro, Will Appear with Emmy Wehlen in "The Belle of the Season," Picturized from a Wilcox Poem

METRO'S staff of directors de luxe has been augmented by the engagement of S. Rankin Drew. Mr. Drew's contract with Vitagraph expires October 21, and he will at once begin work at the Rolfe studio.

Five members of the same famous family will thus be gathered together under one studio roof. S. Rankin Drew is the son of Sidney Drew, who, with Mrs. Drew, produces a one-reel comedy of domestic life each week for the Metro program. Ethel Barrymore and Lionel Barrymore, her brother, have long been stellar attractions in Metro plays.

S. Rankin's Drew's first production will have Emmy Wehlen as star in "The Belle of the Season," a picturization of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's poem of the same name. Metro holds the screen rights to all the Ella Wheeler Wilcox poems, and "The Belle of the Season" will be the first produced under their contract with the famous writer.

Although still a young man, being well under thirty, Mr. Drew has added greatly to the distinction of the family name, and stands squarely on his own merits both as actor and director. Lionel Barrymore first suggetsed his entrance into motion pictures, it is said, and one of his first important productions was the multiple reel feature play, "Thou Art the Man," written by his talented mother shortly before her death, under the pen name of George Cameron.

This production set the pace for his later successes, and the director has given the handling of the popular star, Anita Stewart, in Vitagraph Blue Ribbon features. Perhaps the most prominent of these have been "The Girl Philippa," a picturization of the Robert W. Chambers novel of the same name and Mr. Drew's last contribution to the Vitagraph program, "The Daring of Diana," "The Suspect," and other notable feature photodramas. In many of these Mr. Drew has himself been Miss Stewart's leading support, playing the most important male role. Indeed, it was his acting ability, inherited not only from the Drews and the Barrymores, but from his well-known grandfather, McKee Rankin, which first introduced him to the world of pictures. From acting Mr. Drew was soon promoted to directing and from a member of the directing staff to one who directed only feature photoplays.

Wilfred Lucas, F. A. Turner and Constance Talmage in Two Scenes from "Bugs" (Fine-Arts) with the Little Children George Stone and Violet Radcliff in the Centre from "Everybody's Doin' It," Two New Comedy Releases from Triangle

On the speaking stage Mr. Drew has been associated solely with his father, Sidney Drew. With him he played Captain Jack Absolute in Richard Brinsley Sheridan's "The Rivals," later a leading part in "Billy" at Daly's theatre, New York, and in several other productions, both dramatic and vaudeville. S. Rankin Drew is the author of "What the Moon Saw," a playlet produced by his father and played for eight weeks at the Criterion theatre. "What the Moon Saw" was acclaimed by many critics as being of a delicacy and insight second not even to Barrie. It gave a promise of what may be expected from Mr. Drew later in the field of playwriting.

Metro's new director was born in New York and was graduated from Culver Military Academy.

"THE SHINE GIRL" GETS MANY REPEAT BOOKINGS

"The Shine Girl," the Pathe Gold Rooster play in which Gladys Hulette starred, is proving its worth by the many "repeat" bookings which it is receiving.

Manager Fred Wright of the Colonial theatre, Hagerstown, Md., recently wrote a letter to the Pathe Washington office which is characteristic of many received. He says: "We have shown approximately 620 five and six-reel feature productions in our theatre, but I am sincere in my statement in claiming that 'The Shine Girl' is decidedly one of the most charming, sweet and entertaining feature pictures we have ever shown.

"It is a masterpiece from all angles, story, acting, direction and photography. I made a special point to take note of the many compliments from our patrons as they left the theatre after seeing this picture and it seemed to be the unanimous opinion of our audience that this picture pleased them as well as it did me. We have received over fifty personal requests for a 'repeat' on this picture so please advise us as to the first open date. Give us more pictures like 'The Shine Girl.'"

MARSHALL HANDLES "PURITY"

Vitagraph Announces Autumn and Winter Line-up

"Blue Envelope Mystery" Is Set for October 25 and Will Feature Lillian Walker—"The Last Man," a Curwood Story, Is Scheduled for the 30th

BEGINNING with "The Blue Envelope Mystery" on October 23 Greater Vitagraph presents its Autumn and Winter line-up of stars and attractions for the benefit of exhibitors at large.

"The Blue Envelope Mystery," with Lillian Walker as its bright particular star, originally appeared under the title "The Blue Envelope" in the Woman's Home Companion, a publication having a circulation of 1,250,000 copies per issue.

On October 30 the feature on the Greater Vitagraph program will be "The Last Man," another story by James Oliver Curwood.

It is a story of the great out-doors featuring Mary Anderson and William Duncan, supported by Corinne Griffith, Jack Mower and Otto Lederer. The direction of this production was in the hands of William Wolbert.

On November 6 Antonio Moreno and Naomi Childers are presented in an original story written and directed by Marguerite Bertsch, entitled "The Devil's Prize."

On November 13 exhibitors will receive Vitagraph's second London-made production, "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" featuring Sir Alexander and Hilda Moore.

Marc MacDermott, one of the pioneers of the screen, makes his second appearance on Vitagraph's program in "The Price of Power," a dramatic story by Franklin B. Coates, directed by Charles Brabin. Mr. MacDermott has a dual role to play, calling for double and triple exposure work, and is supported by Naomi Childers, Mother Maurice and a capable cast.

On November 27 E. H. Sothern, the world famous dramatic star, will appear in his second motion picture entitled "An Enemy to the King." This is the play with which Mr. Sothern made his stage reputation. It permits him to play a part with which he is thoroughly familiar. Miss Edith Storey appears in this release.

Swinging into the month of December, Lillian Walker can again be seen in Irvin Cobb's first photodrama, "The Dollar and the Law." This is the production set for release on the fourth of the month. It has been announced that it bears the stamp of approval of the American Bankers' Association.

Paul Scardon, director, has completed the final scenes of "The Enemy," one of the most fascinating stories by the Chesters, George Randolph and Lillian. Realizing the popularity that has come to Peggy Hyland through her association with E. H. Sothern in "The Chattel," Greater Vitagraph selected Miss Hyland for the lead in "The Enemy," supported by a Vitagraph cast, which includes Evart Overton, Charles Kent and James Morrison.

Nearing the holidays, on December 18, Greater Vitagraph presents its third London-made production called "A Rogue by Compulsion." Some of the principals in the case were featured in "The Firm of Girdlestone," the first of Vitagraph's London-made productions. Charles Rock and Edna Flugrath play important roles.

On Christmas Day Greater Vitagraph will release "The Ninety and Nine," featuring William Courtenay, supported by Lucille Lee Stewart. This is a Ralph Ince production. Mr. Courtenay is a finished actor, who has had a great deal of stage experience as the foundation upon which he has built up his screen technique. Miss Stewart has achieved popularity after but three releases.

NEW COMPANY MAKING CARTOONS FOR PATHE NEWS

The Pathe News has recently been publishing some political cartoons which have aroused considerable interest.

These cartoons were made under the Bray patents by the Cartoon Film Service, Inc., a new corporation, which has in its employ some of the ablest cartoonists in the country. The Pathe News will be regularly supplied with the product of their studios. At a meeting last week Watson D. Robinson was elected president, John C. Terry, secretary, and Henry D. Bailey, treasurer of the new company.

Mr. Terry, who came here from the west to direct and manage Cartoon Film Service, is a "native son." He has been a newspaper cartoonist for sixteen years, during which time he has seen service on the San Francisco Call, the San Francisco Examiner and the St. Paul Dispatch. As far back as 1912 he was making animated cartoons.

Glimpses of the Main Action in "Boots and Saddles," the Next Moss Release Founded on Eugene Walter's Play

SUNBEAM WILL RELEASE PICTURE WITH TY COBB AS THE SHINING STAR

The Sunbeam Motion Picture Corporation, with offices at 220 West Forty-second street, will release about the latter part of the month a baseball picture featuring Ty Cobb called "Somewhere in Georgia." The story was written by Grantland Rice, the well-known sporting writer.

In speaking of the new production Wilbur Dunham, of the Sunbeam company, said: "In putting Ty Cobb into motion pictures it has been our aim to give him first a good story and we think we have accomplished this. Many of the incidents in it have been taken direct from Ty Cobb's own life. In this picture he does more than play baseball, although there is a plentitude of the latter throughout the whole production. The picture is a delightfully clean little romance, replete with high-class comedy relief and baseball. Ty Cobb is shown in all of his brilliancy on the diamond and at the bat. None of these baseball pictures were specially posed, but were taken at regular games between the Detroit Tigers and the St. Louis Browns. A special trip was made by the company to St. Louis for the purpose of getting these scenes."

Besides the baseball luminary the supporting cast is made up of such well-known picture people as Elsie MacLeod, William Corbett, Harry Fisher and Nat Burton.

HAM AND BUD AT WORK IN "MERRY MOTOR MENDERS"

Ham, the Kalem fun-maker, is busily at work staging an elaborate one-reel comedy, "The Merry Motor Menders," at the Hollywood (California) studio. An abundance of trick photography is required in this story, which finds Ham and Bud the proprietors of a road-side garage. Business is slow in coming, so Ham and Bud use all sorts of expedients, from tacks and broken bottles to dynamite, to bring it to them.

Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch are also seen to advantage in this single reeler. It is scheduled for release Tuesday, October 31. On the preceding Tuesday, October 24, Kalem releases "The Bogus Booking Agents," a one-reeler, in which the same all-star quartette, Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch, is also seen.

Credit for Submarine Pictures Due Williamsons

The Brothers Are the Inventors of Apparatus Making It Possible to Film Life at Bottom of Sea—Are Establishing Offices Here and Abroad

WITHOUT intention to deceive, some of the most reliable of the daily and weekly papers have erroneously published statements and news items which have had a tendency to mislead as to where the true credit for all Submarine Motion Picture photography rightfully belongs.

The Williamson Brothers alone are the originators and sole producers of this latest and most valuable addition to the motion picture industry, and the only pictures now before the public which have been manufactured with the aid of the Williamson Inventions and Submarine photographic devices, are "The Williamson Submarine Expedition Pictures," now being shown in nearly every corner of the universe, and the unusual and marvelous submarine scenes in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," which opened at the Studebaker theatre, Chicago, on October 9.

Without the aid of these inventions and devices and the scientific knowledge and accomplishments of the Williamson Brothers, neither of these pictures could have been manufactured. In a period of time covering more than four years the Williamson Brothers and the Submarine Film Corporation have expended a half million dollars in continuous undersea research, with submarine chambers, collapsible tubes, diving devices and special photographic appliances, all of which have been fully protected under United States nd foreign patent rights. During these years of operations and research work the Williamson Brothers have gone down under the sea, through the Williamson tube, to the photographic chamber below, and have cruised about over the floor of the ocean, searching out locations of practically all the old wrecks known in the West Indies, and have chartered their locations carefully for future use.

Floating studios, fully equipped for the carrying of one or more companies and directors, will encircle the islands of the West Indies, making pictures with tropical background and native environment. Seagoing yachts of sufficient capacity for this work have been contracted for, and in addition to submarine pictures, tropical and marine features will be produced in lengths ranging from five to ten reels or more.

Executive offices are established on the eighth floor of the Longacre Building, New York City, and branches are being opened in London, Chicago, Los Angeles and Sydney.

Douglas Fairbanks Is Back in Los Angeles

Player Is at Work in "Matrimoniac," Written by Cohen and Directed by Powell for Triangle-Fine Arts—It Will Appear in All-Story Magazine When Picture Is Released

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, of Triangle-Fine Arts is back at the Los Angeles studio of the company at last and has already started working in another picture, under the direction of Paul Powell. This is called "The Matrimoniac" and was written with Mr. Fairbanks in mind by Octavius Roy Cohen. Simultaneously with the release of this picture, which is due in the holidays, the story will appear in the All-Story Magazine, as a four part novel.

On his way West Mr. Fairbanks wired to Mr. Aitken that he wanted John Emerson who directed him in "His Picture in the Papers" to come West and take charge of his productions and that he wanted Anita Loos, who wrote the same picture, to do all the writing of his subtitles. Mr. Aitken granted both these requests and automatically brought a valued tri-star combination into play.

"The Matrimoniac" is a picture that opens with an elopement. The father of the girl concerned, goes off in irate pursuit, catches the prospective bridegroom, Mr. Fairbanks' character, locks him up in a hotel and then summons the police, telling them that his captive is a maniac on the subject of getting married. A number of lively situations ensue and of course Fairbanks comes out of it all on top—and still smiling.

On his way back to Los Angeles from New York, Mr. Fairbanks stopped off at Denver, Colo., his home town and was feted and honored like a presidential candidate. Aside from being asked whether or not he could "lick" William Farnum, making speeches and hits on upturned soap boxes, he was dragged up on the stage of one of the local houses by Mayor Speer and presented to an eager audience.

Philadelphia League Is Reorganized and Enthusiasm of Exhibitors Promises Permanent Interest in the Association

AFTER months of hibernation so deep and profound, many mistook it for real death, it is a pleasure to chronicle the reappearance of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Philadelphia.

Twice before has such an organization been formed, both times to begin auspiciously flourish a short time and then go down to stagnation and dissolution.

But at last the Quaker City contingent seem aroused to their real needs; they are realizing that organization is essential in the picture business even more than in most others.

With this idea in mind a few of the progressive exhibitors in Philadelphia, met a month ago and started the league with about thirty members representing thirty-nine theatres. The election of officers resulted as follows:

President, Morris Spiers of the Central and Plaza theatres; First Vice-President, John O'Donnell, Premier theatre; Second Vice-President, A. Fisher, Mammoth theatre; Secretary, Chas. H. Goodwin, representing eight theatres in the city and state; Treasurers, Harry Green of Susquehanna, Aurora and Norris theatres.

The board of directors are: T. Bagley, Marcus Benn, Harry Berman, W. Butler, George Naudascher, John O'Donnell, Charles Segall, M. Steifel, John Smith and the President M. Spiers.

Meetings are held every Friday at noon in the auditorium of the American Photoplayer Company, Parkway Building, Broad and Cherry streets.

In the short month of the league's existence the membership has increased so rapidly, that now one hundred and eight theatres are represented.

The principal subject of discussion at the meetings thus far has been the necessity of raising admission prices to meet the advanced cost of everything. As a result about fifty per cent. of the five-cent theatres represented have either gone to a straight ten-cent basis or established several ten-cent nights each week. As an example, six of Mr. Goodwin's eight theatres have been raised to the dime admission.

One social occasion has already been enjoyed by the league and its ladies.

On Sunday evening, October 1, the Family theatre at Juniper and Market streets was tended by Manager Bradfield.

The Clara Kimball Young, "The Common Law" was given a prelease, complimentary showing. Other interesting events added to the evening's pleasure.

Among the guests were Lee Ochs, national president.

The aims, ideals and hopes of the league can best be expressed in the secretary's own words printed on an attractive circular gotten out by the league containing list of officers, theatres represented, information about time and place of meetings and amount of dues. It follows.

OUR MESSAGE TO YOU!

MR. EXHIBITOR!

Four weeks ago, amid the scoffs and sneers of the theatre owners of Philadelphia, who had witnessed two previous failures of similar leagues, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia was organized with a list of about thirty members. Today the membership list has grown to over ONE HUNDRED! And still they come.

The league was created as a vital need to alleviate the conditions under which the local exhibitors are laboring. It is purely a beneficial organization. Its success is assured because of the following reasons:

Its sole aim is to help the exhibitor.

Every exhibitor is required to take an active interest in the affairs of the league. Your loyal help comes before your dues.

The management of the league business is not in the hands of any individual or clique of individuals. All members have equal say.

Every member is an enthusiastic booster. They all realize that a failure of the present league would be a calamity for the exhibiting business here and are determined that the league shall be a success.

If you are not yet a member, come in now. Fill out the membership blank, and mail immediately. We need you as much as you need us!

C. H. GOODWIN, Secretary,
M. P. E. L. of Phila.

October 1, 1916.

BROTHER OF "CUBS" MANAGER RUNS THEATRE

Frank Murphy, brother of Charlie Murphy, manager of the Chicago Cubs, is as much interested in running a theatre, as his brother is in baseball. Frank manages the Cub theatre, at Wilmington, Ohio, where Paramount pictures are run exclusively, and it is his daily boast when talking of pictures that he has run every Paramount picture since that organization began the distribution of Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas productions.

BRADFORD, MANAGER OF THE STRAND, NASHVILLE, WILL PROVIDE BEST PICTURES

Now that the Peerless Amusement Company of Nashville, which recently took over the Strand theatre, conceded to be one of the handsomest photoplay houses south of the Ohio River, representing an investment of $25,000, business from now on will be conducted on an entirely different basis as has heretofore been done.

The Strand will now be under the managementship of Carson Bradford. "Nashville," said General Manager Bradford to a representative of NEWS, "has long needed an up-to-date motion picture theatre, a theatre where one's mother, sister, and wife, likewise the little children could go and enjoy an evening of high-class photoplays of the highest type and perfection. As general manager of the Strand, it shall be the height of my ambition to give to the public of Nashville the right kind of plays. I have arrived at a conclusion, that to conduct a photoplay house on a strictly paying basis you've got to provide your patrons with the best pictures on the market—pictures that are clean and carry with them a clean moral lesson to both young and old. When you provide your patrons with such photoplays as these, you can always bank on having an S. R. O. house at each and every performance. The Strand is now enjoying an even better run of business than it has even enjoyed. As long as I remain at the helm as general manager of the Strand I shall make every effort to keep my theatre in keeping with those in the larger cities."

MUST PAY IN ADVANCE FOR SERVICE IN DETROIT

Under a new arrangement, effective October 15, Detroit exhibitors doing business with the Mutual, Universal and General exchanges of Detroit must pay in advance for their service. This action was forced upon the exchanges because of the many losses which they have sustained in the past by the extension of credit. As far as the exhibitor is concerned, he must pay for the film one way or the other, so there should be no objection to paying for it in advance, is the statement made by the exchanges.

"If we were absolutely certain that we would get our money for service from every exhibitor, we would gladly extend credit, but our experience in the past has shown that many exhibitors have no intention of paying when they take service," said one exchange manager. "Under the new arrangement our profit and loss accounts will cease to exist."

WOMEN'S CLUBS OF NEBRASKA URGE SHOWING OF THE BETTER FILMS

Women's clubs of Nebraska, individually and collectively, have lined up to boycott the motion picture theatres that do not show the better class of films. No action looking toward censorship has been taken, however—luckily for the Nebraska exhibitors, who are not maintaining an organization that could combat such a move.

Ida Robbins of Lincoln and Mrs. Hugh Lamasters were instructed by the Nebraska State Federation of Women's Clubs, meeting at Hastings, Neb., last week, to go before the state convention of motion picture men when it is held and ask for a better class of films. Resolutions were passed that club women over the state are to patronize only those pictures houses which accept the better films. A committee appointed a year ago to make a special investigation throughout the state, reported that educational pictures are unsuccessful. The women reported that children and adults wish to be entertained, not educated, when they go to a moving picture theatre.

Mrs. E. M. Syfert, head of the Omaha, Neb., Federation of Women's Clubs, spoke at a meeting last week and emphasized the fact that it is much more expedient, and far more satisfactory, to co-operate with the exhibitors and not antagonize them in a movement the women launched for better films for Omaha children. The clubwomen voted unanimously to lend their influence to boosting the houses that show the better class of pictures.

Following the state federation meeting, the Omaha meeting was duplicated in nearly every city and town in Nebraska.

ROWLAND & CLARK HOUSES HAVE NEW FORM OF PROGRAM

For a number of months the Rowland and Clark management has issued a separate program for its houses in the Pittsburgh section, but with this week's issue the order has been changed, with the result that a sixteen-page magazine is issued containing the program for all the houses in the chain with the exception of the Bellevue theatre.

It is one of the most interesting programs of its kind issued in this section and contains live motion picture news together with a liberal amount of ads. It is mailed to 10,000 persons in the districts served by the company's theatres.

The magazine is 8 by 11 inches and is compact, complete and very interesting to picture fans. M. J. C. Kornblum is the publicity manager of the Rowland and Clark theatres and he is to be congratulated on the quality of the magazine which he has issued for his company. It is without a doubt one of the largest and best house organs in the country. The title of the magazine is "The Film Forecast."

D. C. THEATRE LICENSES EXPIRE OCTOBER 31

The licenses of all theatres in the District of Columbia will expire on October 31, according to announcement of William P. Richard, Assessor of Taxes for the District of Columbia, and all who desire to continue the theatre business after that date should promptly renew such licenses.

Illinois Exhibitors' Meeting in Chicago Is Largest in Two Years; Two Hundred Present

THE meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Illinois Branch, held Friday, October 6, was the largest regular meeting in two years. The meeting was called at 11 A. M., and by the time the Dutch Lunch was served over two hundred exhibitors were present.

Promptly at 12:30 the president called an open session and every seat in the large hall was filled with exhibitors, exchangemen, accessory, men and representatives from the trades journals. Fifteen new members were admitted to league membership and applications for as many more were received.

The opening address was made by M. A. Choynski, his remarks being confined to the good of organization, the value of the screen as an advertising medium and the great influence the league, working as a unit, will have on the coming election. Sam Spedon made a few remarks on overproduction.

Various subjects of pertinence to the industry were discussed by the following speakers:

H. Schoenstadt, W. J. Sweeney, Adolph Powell, H. Lieberthal, R. O. Proctor, R. Fulton, Sam Katz, Louis H. Frank, Alfred Hamburger, Joseph Hopp, Charles Abrams, Sidney Smith and George Laing.

The following resolutions regarding street carnivals were adopted and a committee consisting of Messrs. Schoenstadt, Frank and Katz were instructed to present said resolutions to the Mayor of the City of Chicago, to the Commissioner of Streets, States Attorney and the City Council:

Whereas, In the past, and also at the present time, street carnivals in the City of Chicago work nothing but hardships on the merchants and exhibitors in the neighborhoods where said carnivals are being held; and

Whereas, Said carnivals have a tendency to bring undesirable people to the neighborhood; and

Whereas, Most of these carnivals hold games of chance, offering chickens, ducks, geese, candy and other merchandise as prizes;

We, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Illinois Branch, hereby protest against any and all carnivals that hold free shows and erect booths on streets for this sale of merchandise;—and do most emphatically object to said carnivals helding these games of chance, this being unfair competition to all theatre owners and merchants who are engaged in legitimate business in said neighborhood.

The chairman of the Political Action Committee reported that their committee meets on Wednesday, October 11, at 11 A. M. at the League Headquarters.

A committee from the L. I. L. M. Club consisting of Messrs. Proctor, Judell and Balaban submitted a proposition from a delivery company, who guarantee the insurance against loss of all film after it leaves the exchange, also will guarantee the prompt delivery of same. This matter was referred to the Executive Committee and they will take action on same at the next Executive Committee meeting.

The most important news imparted to the league members was that a truce had been declared between the two operators' unions and all differences have been settled for the present by a board of arbitration.

Another meeting will be held on Friday, November 3. Free dutch lunch. Open meeting at 12:30. If you are not a member, join now and help boost.

Neighborhood House Raises Evening Prices to Twenty-five Cents and Plays to Capacity

STARTING October 15, the Majestic theatre, Detroit, Mich., entered on a new booking arrangement. It has contracted for first-run Paramount and runs on Mary Pickford Artcraft productions. It has already paid by check $3000 for the first Mary Pickford Artcraft production, "Less than Dust," which it will show early in November, for two weeks. Securing the first run Paramount franchise gives the Majestic the selection of two programs—the Paramount and Triangle. The Majestic pays for both programs and uses one.

The Majestic announces a general advance in its prices of admission. A few weeks ago it raised prices on all seats to twenty-five cents on Sundays only, but on account of the increased film rental and other increased expenses, it raised all seat prices to twenty-five cents October 2 for all performances, except the matinees. In other words, there is no admission to the Majestic at nights less than twenty-five cents. This announcement caused considerable comment in the film world in Detroit and many said "They would never get away with it." Judging from the business the first weeks of the new scale the advanced prices have more than "made good" because during the weeks of October 2 and October 9 the Majestic played to the best business since it has been operating.

The Majestic is getting the highest general admission price of any theatre in Detroit, and yet it is more than one mile from downtown. It plays to capacity almost every evening performance.

MANY EXHIBITORS ATTEND OMAHA FESTIVAL

A royal welcome was given exhibitors in the Omaha territory who visited the exchange city during the Ak-Sar-Ben festivities Oct. 2-7. Hundreds of exhibitors visited the various exchanges, where the exchange manager was the chairman of a committee, and the department heads and road men were committeemen, organized to welcome them. Every exhibitor possible was dined at the Movie Inn and visited several of the leading theatres in the city. Manager Taylor of the General exchange got the Selig Polyscope Company photographer to come from Chicago and film the big historical parade, with President Wilson in attendance, for the Selig-Tribune weekly.

Exhibitors in Baltimore Confronted by Unfair Vaudeville Competition

MOTION picture exhibitors of Baltimore are much exercised regarding the recent plan of vaudeville theatres which conduct ten-cent performances, in showing pictures in conjunction with their theatrical program. Just what steps will be taken by the motion picture men is not at present known. Some of the leading exhibitors have been in consultation for several days past discussing the advisability of calling a general meeting of motion picture interests with a view of ascertaining just what can be done.

Of course, boycott would not be permissable under the Federal law, but there has been some talk of organizing and insisting that the picture producers or film distributing concerns which book their big features for first run in vaudeville houses at ten cents permit the picture theatres to exhibit the same pictures for a five-cent admission.

The motion picture exhibitors maintain that they are at a distinct disadvantage. Several of these vaudeville houses are making a direct drive for the motion picture enthusiasts, or the patrons of the straight line motion picture theatres. Some of the vaudeville theatres show five or six acts of vaudeville in conjunction with which they present seven, eight, and sometimes nine reels of motion pictures, included in which is a five or six-reel feature production. For this big show they charge a minimum admission of ten cents. Many of the motion picture theatres in the center of the city give only a five-reel feature, and in some cases this is presented in conjunction with a two-reel comedy or two reels of some other fill-in, for which an admission of ten cents is also charged. As a matter of fact, it is necessary that they get ten cents, or they would not be permitted to get the five-reel feature.

Just what can be done by the picture men, of course, is not known, but there is a confident feeling that there is something they can accomplish to offset this unfair competition. The competition will be more thoroughly understood when it is considered that in many cases the vaudeville houses are directly opposite the motion picture theatres showing the feature productions a week or so later, or that the respective houses are only a few squares apart from each other.

Exhibitors in New Jersey Organized League Branch

MORE than a hundred motion picture exhibitors from every county in New Jersey met at Achtel-Stetter's, Newark, last week, for the purpose of perfecting a state-wide organization. Although it was the first time that motion picture men representing every section of New Jersey had been called together for business purposes the work of organizing was completed within an hour of the time Chairman Charles Hesbe, of Jersey City, called the meeting to order. The organization will be known as the New Jersey Motion Picture Exhibitors League and will be affiliated with the Federation of Moving Picture Exhibitors of America. The officers chosen for the year are: President, Charles Hesbe, Jersey City; Vice President, John F. Rockefeller, Monmouth county; Secretary, Philip Bornstein, Newark; Treasurer, John Crawford, Newark.

In addition to the work of organizing the exhibitors took a decided stand in favor of Sunday opening throughout the State and in a set of resolutions, unanimously adopted, condemned any censorship that did not originate with the judgment of the people.

Mayor Raymond made the address of welcome. "My object in personally coming to you," said the Mayor, "is to assure you that insofar as my authority extends I assure you that it will at all times be in behalf of a square deal for the motion picture men of New Jersey. There seems to be a spirit of dislike for any profession or trade which tries to entertain the public. I don't know why this is true. Newark, and a large part of the population of New Jersey is cosmopolitan. It is not strange that this army of workers longs for pleasure and recreation. They are democratic and fair-minded in their tastes and convictions. The spirit of dislike for professional entertainments and entertainers can probably be traced to other sources. But wherever and whatever the source or sources this objectionable condition can be eliminated by patient and systematic campaigning that has no other object than the education of the prejudiced and the partisan."

Walter W. Irwin, of the Vitagraph company, followed the Mayor with an appeal to the clergymen to consider all phases of the open-Sunday-question in New Jersey before they sought to register their opposition to the movement.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

"The 'News' wishes to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything in fact done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. Theatre Cares for Kiddies While Mothers See Show

CONFIDENCE and good-will of the people in the community where his theatre is located, were recognized as necessary attainments by Dr. Otto Dieckmann, manager of the Nordland Plaza Theatre, 2621 Vine street, Cincinnati. In order to obtain the confidence of his patrons he has adopted a measure which has brought him the good-will of every parent as well as bringing him a lot of substantial publicity. His plan was evolved by combining the idea behind the agitation for children's matinees with the day nursery idea. To carry out the project he has turned over to his wife and a woman friend the theatre on Saturday afternoons from 1 to 5 p. m. The programs have been so attractive to the younger generation that the theatre on the two occasions on which the scheme has been tried, has been packed with delighted children.

The other part of the plan has made a distinct hit with mothers of the neighborhood, for whom the care of their children on Saturday afternoons has been a great problem. This is the idea:

Circulars were sent out through the suburbs inviting the mothers to allow the responsible women in the community to act as nurses for their children on Saturday afternoons. It was explained that if these mothers desired to go shopping they might do so without taking the children. By leaving them at the theatre, it was stated, they might be sure the children were in good hands, and would be entertained with a clean form of motion picture amusement. So much of this amusement would be given them, it was promised, that it would last for a whole week, and the little ones would not be begging to go to the shows during other parts of the week.

The regular admission price at the Nordland is ten cents. Nine reels of specially adapted children's pictures are offered on Saturday afternoon at five cents. In addition to this, the children are given candy by the management, and their comfort and amusement otherwise looked after by women who know all about kiddies. So far the experiment has been very successful, and might be adopted to advantage by other managers. The cost of the additional program is just about covered by the small admission charged. Dr. Dieckmann feels that even if he should operate his Saturday matinee at a loss, he would be well repaid in dividends of publicity and good-will. Following is the circular he sent out just previous to the showing of the first matinee:

THE NORDLAND PLAZA THEATRE

Dear Friend:

Don't treat this message as an advertisement. Before you reach "yours truly" you will realize that one of the greatest problems of a mother has been solved.

What do you do with your children when you go shopping? Saturday afternoon is the busiest day of the week. If you have no person to leave them with, you drag them along through the crowds. If you do leave them at home alone, you do your shopping half heartedly, because your mind is at home with the children.

You know that the best persons to care for children are women. Then why not leave them with women.

The Nordland Plaza Theatre will have Saturday Matinees, conducted by two women who know how to satisfy children.

For your benefit these women have arranged special children's matinees to be held every Saturday afternoon starting at 1:00 P. M.

As the children enter the theatre they will be given an "all day sucker," so if you are wise, you will dress them in their rompers. The program will consist of pictures that will interest children only. The admission price will be 5 cents to all. Adults are not invited to these parties, because they would be dissatisfied with the pictures. They are welcome though if they wish to come. For instance, the first program will consist of a two-reel Chaplin picture, a one-reel Mary Pickford subject, a two-reel war drama, a two reel Keystone comedy, a Mutt and Jeff cartoon, a Jungle comedy, and a one-reel Indian drama. You will notice that there will be enough pictures to keep them interested all afternoon.

The women conducting the theatre will be glad to meet you at the theatre and take charge of your children. We expect the din in the theatre, when the Kiddies get there to shame a boiler factory. The house will be given over to the children to do as they please.

The regular Triangle program will be shown Saturday night.

Now remember, next Saturday the fun starts, and will be kept up all winter. When the children leave the theatre they will have their fill of pictures for the rest of the week, and when they reach home they will be all tired out ready for bed.

Hoping that you appreciate our efforts in your behalf, we remain,

Yours truly,
THE MANAGEMENT.

Seattle Theatre Creates New Type of Billboard Advertising as Link in Its Campaign

The accompanying photo is of an eight-sheet billboard designed in the office of the Greater Theatres Company, Inc., of Seattle, Wash., for a billing campaign in the business streets of Seattle.

Fac-simile of the Poster Used to Strengthen the Theatre's Newspaper Advertising

J. G. von Herberg, manager of the Liberty theatre, is a large user of billboard and newspaper advertising (the largest in the state in newspaper space). This stand was created to back up the theatre's various advertising,—a reminder to the pedestrian already in the business section that the Liberty has certain features exclusively.

The colors were orange and black, with tone variations of these two colors. On either side of the Statue of Liberty was left a space sufficient for a one-sheet pictorial of the current week's plays and a date sheet to identify the days it was being shown.

The contrasting colors, coupled with the locations (ten and, in some places, fifty to a hundred thousand people passing every day) and the fact that this theatre was first in the field with its own type of stand, make it a very effective advertising idea.

"PURITY" STUNT DRAWS CROWDS IN SAN FRANCISCO

Sid Grauman, manager of the Empress theatre, San Francisco, which has been showing "Purity" for the past two weeks, is responsible for a publicity stunt that attracted wide attention. A young lady, dressed in the attire of a bride, has been making the rounds of the leading downtown streets wheeling a baby carriage bearing the single word "Purity." Nothing more was needed, as the city has been billboarded thoroughly and there were few who did not know what the attraction was at the Empress. Incidentally, there was a waiting list at almost every performance, the film having proved to be an immense drawing card.

A GOOD HEART TO HEART TALK PAYS

"Why do you like to deal at one store more than another? We believe it is because some give 'service' and a 'square deal.' This is also one of the things the Royal believes in—service and a square deal. A picture cannot be shown at the Royal unless it is good—we believe that is our duty to you. Of course, we can't promise that all pictures we show will appeal to you—they probably won't, because some like one kind of picture and some like others. But no matter what the type of production, western, society or comedy, if it appears at the Royal, you may rest assured that it is a good production of its type."

We rather like the little "Heart Talks," which the Royal theatre, Calumet, Mich., has with its patrons week by week. Talks like these are convincing, they go straight home with the public who appreciate an honest statement.

ROTH, SAN FRANCISCO, BOOKS SERIAL FOR FIRST TIME

Manager Eugene Roth, of the Market Street Realty Company, which controls the Portola and Market Street Theaters, and which is building the largest moving picture house on the Pacific Coast at Fourth and Market streets, San Francisco, has booked two serials, "The Scarlet Runner" and "The Shielding Shadow," for the Market Street Theatre.

This is the first time that he has ever booked serials, but he has been impressed by the attractions he has selected and by the value of this form of photoplay entertainment. These serials will be advertised both on the billboards and through the medium of newspapers, Mr. Roth being a firm believer in these forms of publicity.

NOVEL ADVERTISING PLAN FOR "FRIDAY THE 13TH"

"Look out! You're walking under a ladder!"

"When you forgot something and went back to the house for it, did you remember to sit in a chair before you came away again?"

"Beware of the black cat!"

"There goes a star! Say 'Money, money, money!'"

These, tastefully arranged on a card and glaring at the busy little city of Hastings, Neb., from the billboards, and grabbing the attention of the casual newspaper reader, are some of the things used by Cooper & Johnson of the Plaza theatre in advertising Robert Warwick in "Friday, the 13th," the World feature.

SORIERO BAFFLES TRAFFIC COPS WITH GLADYS HULETTE

Another of Thomas D. Soriero's advertising stunts was pulled off in Boston, last Monday afternoon, when Miss Gladys Hulette, ostensibly locked in the front room of the Park theatre, and the key lost, descended to Washington street on a ladder with no one at all looking on but enough to jam the street for blocks and obstruct traffic for half an hour. Everybody likes Mr. Soriero's stunts except the traffic cops.

THINK THIS OVER

It is the desire of Motion Picture News to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. Address: Editor, Motion Picture News, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

IT ISN'T A GARAGE—IT'S AN UP TO DATE THEATRE

No, gentle reader, this is not a fire station. Neither is it a garage. It is a picture of Preston Brothers theatre, the Crescent, at Audubon, Ia.. Manager F. A. Van Husan of the Western Supply Company recently equipped the house with a Fort Wayne motor generator set, a Power's 6-B machine, and other equipment.

The Crescent, Audubon, Iowa. Preston Bros., Managers

The picture shows the lobby closed for severe winter weather. These window-doors which allow the passerby a view of the interior, while keeping it warm inside, can be opened and folded back, taking up the minimum of space.

REMODELING HOUSE BRINGS BUSINESS

When the Market Street Realty Company took over the Market street theatre of San Francisco a few months ago, it was confronted with a serious problem. Here was a house in a choice location, with a good seating capacity, an attractive exterior and presenting a good program that was not meeting with success. Manager Eugene Roth of the Portola theatre, which is owned by the same company, diagnosed the case and made recommendations that were acted upon as quickly as possible. The orchestra that had been in the house for years was taken out and another put in its place. A campaign of billboard advertising was then inaugurated and a great increase in attendance was noted immediately. Manager Roth then decided that in spite of its location and handsome front it was not sufficiently prominent and added a handsome marquis, extending over the entire sidewalk. This has proved a very effective addition, and this house is rapidly becoming one of the best known on Market street. The former name, "The House of Movies," has been dropped.

PASSES FOR CHILDREN WHO PROVE BEST ARTISTS

J. D. Meyers, of the firm of Meyers and Leiter, Paramount exhibitors in La Grande, Oregon, inaugurated a very clever medium by which they greatly increased their business in connection with the presentation of "The Clown," a Paramount picture produced by Lasky.

A week prior to the showing of this picture, Mr. Meyer's announced to his patrons that he would award a month's pass to the Arcade theatre, for the best hand drawn pictures of clowns and a two weeks' pass to the second best, the drawings to be made by children under sixteen years of age.

The mail was filled with letters in response to the announcement and more than four hundred children drew their conception of clowns. These drawings were exhibited in artistically arranged sets in the lobby of the theatre during the showing of the Paramount picture and created a goodly amount of favorable comment and interest among the older people of the community, as well as the youngsters.

FREE SCHOOL CHILDREN'S SHOW A HIT IN DALLAS

In accordance with his usual custom of entertaining the kiddies at intervals, P. G. Cameron of the Crystal theatre leased the Roseland theatre at Dallas, Texas., Saturday, September 16, and gave a free show to the school children. A suitable program was arranged and all of the little ones were made welcome from 9 a.m. to 12 o'clock noon.

In addition to an appropriate selection of comedy films, the first episode of the Universal special feature "Liberty" was shown. This picture was very entertaining and pleased the children, as it showed Mexico as it is, and was, during the stirring times of war. The Roseland was packed to capacity and the children all voted as having had the time of their young lives.

"French Munition Workers" Appear in Gaumont-Mutual "Reel Life" for October 22

THE first release of the week of October 22 through the Gaumont laboratories and studios is No. 25 of "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film. The great industrial changes brought about in Europe by the war are shown in startling fashion in pictures of "French Munition Workers." A second section of this issue contrasts eastern and western barbecues in the United States. The third section shows the method of ferrying trains across the Sacramento River in California.

"See America First" of October 25 is devoted to Hot Springs, Va. These pictures make plain to one why society has chosen it for a play ground. The hotels, mountain drives, and springs have prominent places in the release. On the same reel is an animated cartoon by Harry Palmer.

The third single reel release of the week is the Mutual Weekly.

The Gaumont Company will soon issue a fourth weekly single reel to be known as "Mutual Tours Around the World." This well be a scenic and travel film of foreign lands, released every Tuesday. The first release will be November 7.

Among the prominent players who will appear in the Gaumont series of "The Vampires" are Juliet Musidora, Florence Simoni, Edmond Mathe, Marcel Levesque, Eugene Ayme, Jacques Hermann and Henri Leubas. These are all popular screen stars of France.

"PAYING THE PRICE" SCREENED WITH GAUMONT FAVORITES

The Gaumont Company will contribute a two-reel photodrama through Mutual October 30, "Paying the Price," which will have in the cast a number of old Gaumont favorites. Marian Swayne will be seen in the leading role, that of a girl about to be forced into an unwelcome marriage to save the man who has won her hand. Joseph Levering, who directed the production, plays opposite Miss Swayne. Flavia Arcare, whose long list of Gaumont "vampires" is notable, has a role of this character. The political boss is played by Fritz Orlamond, a favorite in Gaumont stock in character roles.

"Paying the Price" tells of the heart struggles of a girl whose fiance is "framed" by a political boss because he himself is in love with the girl. When the young man thinks he has murdered the siren, he flees. Even then the girl does not turn to the boss, but seeks consolation in a friend of the man she had loved but whom she thinks faithless.

CAMPBELL COMPLETES "GARDEN OF ALLAH" FOR SELIG

It is stated that "The Garden of Allah" has been completed by Colin Campbell at the Los Angeles, Cal., studios of the Selig Polyscope Company, and that the public will be permitted to view the film dramatization of Robert Hichens' novel in the not far distant future.

It is claimed that "The Garden of Allah" will prove to be the most beautiful production ever filmed by the Selig Company.

The scenic effects in "The Garden of Allah" are said to be particularly noteworthy, carrying as they do the Oriental atmosphere in which Colin Campbell excels. Thousands of people take part in the spectacular scenes, which include an attack on a caravan by Bedouins of the desert. There is also a realistic sand storm in which tents are blown down and camels and horses cower before the rain of sand.

Director Colin Campbell has arrived in Chicago to confer with William N. Selig as to the cutting and trimming of the production, and it is said that no expense will be spared in the exploitation of the elaborate drama.

Helen Ware and Thomas Santschi are assisted by an all-star cast including Harry Lonsdale, Eugenie Besserer, James Bradbury, Will Machin and others.

DOROTHY GISH AND BESSIE BARRISCALE IN TRIANGLE NOVEMBER RELEASES

Dorothy Gish and Bessie Barriscale are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for the week of November 5. Miss Gish appears in a Fine Arts production recently produced under the direction of George Siegmann. Miss Barriscale is the heroine of an Irish comedy written especially for her by C. Gardner Sullivan and produced at the Kay Bee studios under the direction of Charles Miller and Thomas H. Ince.

In "Atta Boy's Last Race" Miss Gish has been provided with a part which gives her the opportunity to exert her charm amid the picturesque surroundings of the race track.

"A Corner in Colleens," Bessie Barriscale romps through five reels of laughing drama as the eldest of four orphaned colleens—known as the prettiest in Ireland. She and her sisters live with the goodhearted widow Fahy in a cottage owned by a rich young American. Charles Ray and Margery Wilson render Miss Barriscale's support.

"KISS" COMPLETED FOR FAMOUS

"The Kiss," a Famous Players-Paramount production in which Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot are co-starred under the direction of Del Henderson, is completed and will be released October 19. The picture is described as a dramatic farce and concerns the rivalry of a social highwayman and a French aviator for the hand of a charming young social secretary. The complications that arise throughont the picture are both original and humorous.

It was for this production that both Miss Courtot and Mr. Moore made aeroplane flights at Amityville, L. I., in a Lawrence Sperry machine and these scenes are to appear in the completed picture.

Working of a Potter's Wheel Forms Interesting Contribution to Reel Life, Released October 15

SINCE the potter's wheel is probably the first mechanical aid invented by man, unusual interest will attach to the pictures which show the modern duplication of methods of making ancient pottery in Gaumont's "Reel Life" No. 24, reelased October 15. Every process is shown from the separation of the pulverized clay from dirt and stones to the final baking. Among the entertaining views are tempering the clay, the final kneading, moulding upon the potter's wheel, retouching, and baking. This pottery is manufactured near New York city, and the only modern device employed is the application of power. Electricity is the power that is used in turning the wheel.

A second section of this issue of "Reel Life" will be one of the instructive pictures which make a universal appeal, since it shows Uncle Sam's weather kites in service at the government aerological station at Drexel, Neb. The weather is the topic of conversation most in use, and these pictures show one of the methods of providing weather forecasts. There are pictures of the reel house, on its revolving foundation, from which the kites are flown. The kites are fastened by strong piano wire to an electric reel. The height is measured by a theodolite, and the electricity gathered by the wires by a voltmeter. The latter occasionally registers 50,000 volts. Each kite carries a meteorograph to record the humidity, temperature, wind velocity and barometric pressure in the cloud region. More than forty kites are used at this station.

The third section shows a cat and her kittens at play.

Pathe's "Sultana," a Gold Rooster in Natural Colors, Ready on October 29

PATHE will release on October 29 "The Sultana," a Gold Rooster Play in Pathe color.

The story is an adaption from Henry C. Rowland's popular novel and features Ruth Roland in a role particularly suited to her personality and talents. She is supported by William Conklin and a capable Balboa cast including Daniel Gilfeather, Charles Dudley and Frank Erlanger. When the Pathe officials first viewed this film they were so impressed with the careful artistic selection the Balboa directors had exercised in the outdoor settings that they decided to give it an added value and sent it to the Pathe studios in France to be colored. In its present shape it is a splendid example of color photography.

"The Sultana" is a priceless jewel and the story centers around its mysterious appearances and reappearances and the weird affect it has on the destinies of all who come within the radiance of its dazzling dangerous rays. The action begins midst the whirl of the wheel and the clink of gold where Dame Fortune frowns on Doctor Mills (William Conklin), but before the tale ends the old adage proves true that "Unlucky at cards lucky at love." There is crisp action to every foot and thrills and romance have been worked into a scenario of pleasing balance with suspense consistently sustained throughout.

"The Sultana," as it is rich in dramatic situations and beautified by natural coloring, should prove to be a most acceptable offering to any exhibitor from a box-office standpoint.

Baseball Episode in Beatrice Fairfax Series Real Game Between Giants and Yankees—Released During World Series

"PLAY BALL," the tenth episode of the International's photo play series "Beatrice Fairfax," will be released next Monday, Sept. 9, while the World Series is in progress.

The episode has to do with the kidnapping of "Kerrigan," the star pitcher of the New York Giants. Many of the scenes were made at the Polo Grounds during the recent benefit game between the Giants and the Yankees, which was witnessed by more than 18,000 persons. It shows both teams in action, with Manager McGraw of the Giants, Manager Donovan, of the Yankees and all the stars, including Benny Kauff, Charley Herzog, "Heinie" Zimmerman, Fritz Maisel, Walter Pipp and others putting up as great a game as they ever played. The camera caught Benny Kauff knocking the home run which won the game, and the vast audience going wild with enthusiasm.

It was in this game that Ferd Schupp, the Giant pitcher, was knocked out of the box by the Yankees, after which he started his long run of victories which form a part of the Giants' great record. In addition to the base ball stars, four of the International's stars have prominent parts in the episode. They are Harry Fox, who is the real star of the series; Grace Darling, Olive Thomas and Nigel Barrie.

A Quartet of Close-ups from the New Metro-Yorke Offering "Big Tremaine," Featuring Harold Lockwood and May Allison

GREATER VITAGRAPH PRESENTS FILM OF HOME COMPANION SERIAL

In the "Blue Envelope Mystery"—Vitagraph, special thought has been given toward presenting a motion picture of adventure such as would appeal directly to women and children without features that might be objectionable to them. It was written by Sophie Kerr, and ran in serial form in the Women's Home Companion.

It was dramatized for the film by Helen Duey, editor of the Better Films department of that publication, and produced by Vitagraph with special reference to following out the spirit of this story as printed. Lillian Walker was chosen to interpret the heroine, Leslie Brennan. Wilfred North is the director and Tom Molloy the camera man.

Leslie Brennan is an heiress until upon a day she discovers that she is really almost penniless and faces the ordeal of making her own living. Before that she had become dazzled by the society manners of a cold hearted fortune hunter.

Revealing to him that she is no longer possessed of wealth she is disillusioned and goes at once to earn her livelihood.

"BIG TREMAINE" NEARLY FINISHED

Director Henry Otto in a week will have taken the very last scenes and will then immediately start to assemble and title it.

The entire story is laid in Virginia, and the theme deals with a profound sacrifice on the part of "Big Tremaine."

FLORENCE LA BADIE STARTS NEW PICTURE SOON

June Caprice Cast for Leading Role in Fox Production of "The Ragged Princess," a Modern Version of Cinderella

JUNE CAPRICE, is cast for the leading role in the Fox production "The Ragged Princess," her third moving picture production. The photoplay, while entirely modern in settings and application, recalls inevitably the winsome tale of Cinderella, and has much of the charm of the old story.

Harry Hilliard plays opposite Miss Caprice. Mrs. Irene Lee, mother of the famous Jane and Katherine, has a part in the picture with them. This is Mrs. Lee's debut before the camera.

The early scenes of the newest William Fox screen drama are laid in an orphanage, where a brutal matron makes a house of terror for all under her charge. One of the children is Alicia Jones, who scours the floors and does every task assigned her patiently and quietly. Her spirit is so broken by the harsh treatment that she will not revolt.

As the easiest way out, the drudge determines to run away. She leaves the great black place she had called home, and comes to Farmer Rice's.

There she finds a pair of overalls and a wide brimmed hat in the barn, and she dresses up as a man. Farmer Rice hires her to do the milking. Then she meets Harry Deigan, one of the help, and falls in love with him. When the farmer learns that his new employee is a girl he becomes so wrathful that Alicia is forced to flee from his house.

She takes refuge beneath the rug in an automobile, and finally arrives in the city at the house of Thomas Deigan, a rich mine-owner, who adopts her. Meantime, Harry learns the Deigan is his own half-brother, and goes to the city to investigate.

Harry keeps secret his own identity, and applies for work in the mine. He finds that there is something criminally wrong in his brother's deed to the mining property, but he cannot place the exact discrepancy at first.

He is hurt in a mine accident, but Alicia nurses him back to health. He renews his investigations, and learns that the land had belonged formerly to a Mrs. Jones, who had been killed in a flood which washed away her home. Her daughter had been rescued and placed in an orphanage. Alicia was that daughter.

Harry confronts his brother with the truth, at a time when Tom is trying to force his drunken attentions upon the waif. Deigan realizes that his deception has been discovered and acknowledges his guilt.

In "The Love Hermit" William Russell is supported by Charlotte Burton and a cast composed of Queenie Rosson, William Stowell, Harry Von Meter and Ashton Dearholt.

In it William Russell plays the role of a young stock broker, Tom Weston, who falls in love with the daughter of his employer.

"The Undertow," featuring Helene Rosson and Franklin Ritchie, is the retitle for "Esther of the People," a five-part feature produced under the able direction of Frank Thorne.

This is a story from the pen of Rosalie Ashton.

"The Undertow" is the story of a great captain of industry, succeeded from poverty by sheer determination, who is handicapped by a slovenly wife. Franklin Ritchie plays the role of the grim, determined man, and Eugenie Forde that of his useless wife, who does not care for the rise in prosperity, nor does she attempt to fit herself for her new position.

Miss Rosson is cast for the role of Esther, who, born to luxury, is forced to earn her bread in the factory which James King (Ritchie) owns.

In support of the leading characters are Orral Humphrey, Harry Von Meter, George Ahern, Charles Newton and Josephine Taylor.

The drama output of shorter reel length consists of "Professor Jeremy's Experiment," a humorous drama, featuring Orral Humphrey, produced by the American Company, "The Folly of Fear," a drama featuring Edwin August, and "At Twelve O'Clock."

In "The Folly of Fear" Edwin August appears in the leading role of La Rue, a young novelist.

Iva Shepard plays the role of Grace Ellis, a girl who refuses to marry La Rue, but later does him a great favor in restoring to him the wife whom he later weds and then believes guilty of a great crime. William Bailey plays the role of an unscrupulous adventurer. Ruth Blair is cast for the wife.

"At Twelve O'Clock" is a drama of love and intrigue.

The comedy releases number some very amusing Cubs, one American Beauty, aside from Harry Palmer's animated cartoon which forms half of the split reel, "See America First," from the Gaumont Company.

"Lovers and Lunatics," "Dad's Experiment" and "When Cubs Were Trumps" are the Cub one-reelers of the week.

"He Died and He Didn't," a two-reel comedy featuring Rube Miller and Ben Turpin, in which the curly-headed little ingenue, Lillian Hamilton, also plays an important part, is the Vogue for Sunday.

Mutual Weekly, No. 95, and the split reel, "See America First," and Kartoon Komics appear, as usual, on Wednesday. "Reel Life," the Mutual's magazine in film, goes out on Sunday. All are produced by the Gaumont Company.

GLADYS HULETTE IN "HER NEW YORK"

Gladys Hulette, the Thanhouser star, has nearly completed "Her New York," a story by Agnes C. Johnston and directed by O. A. C. Lund. In "Her New York," Miss Hulette has a vehicle even more dramatic than "The Shine Girl" or "Prudence, the Pirate," and with as many little human touches. Mr. Lund has produced splendid New York scenes.

G. Vere Tyler Subject, "The Wax Model," Is Picked by Morosco for Vivian Martin

THE Morosco-Pallas organization has closed with G. Vere Tyler, the well-known essayist and fictionist, for the motion picture rights of "The Wax Model." This novelette created considerable attention in The Smart Set about a year ago, and will be produced on the screen with Vivian Martin in the star part.

Mrs. Tyler has had many motion picture offers for this subject, and it was only after a particularly flattering offer was made by Morosco-Pallas, that she agreed to have it appear on the screen. The name of G. Vere Tyler is prominently known and represents one of the most interesting and versatile women authors. Besides having written a series of novels and leading articles for the press, Mrs. Tyler is a regular contributor to many magazines and periodicals. Among her best known novels are "Passion," "The Prodical Daughter," "Dregs In the Cup," and the most recent published by Duffield and Company entitled "The Daughter of a Rebel."

Mrs. Tyler's reputation has been largely enhanced by her original articles on the subject of marriage and divorce, the drug evil, child labor, etc., which she handled relentlessly. These articles have appeared from time to time in Elbert Hubbard's The Fra, New York Evening Sun, New York Evening Mail, New York Morning and Evening World, and other leading papers throughout the country. Recently Mrs. Tyler has been writing articles for the editorial pages of the New York American and other Hearst papers which attracted wide attention. A series of articles on "How Woman Can Aid Preparedness" were widely copied and created considerable discussion. Mrs. Tyler is the daughter-in-law of John Tyler, ex-president of the United States, and is much sought after in social circles. Vivian Martin in a subject by G. Vere Tyler, produced by Morosco-Pallas for the Paramount Program is a combination that speaks volumes as a photoplay of unusual excellence.

Kalem Announces Coming Releases in "Grant" One-Reel Series, Starting October 20

FULL speed ahead is the word on Kalem's new series "Grant, Police Reporter," which makes its bow on October 20 with the release of "The Code Letter." The finishing touches have already been put to the second episode, "The Missing Heiress," while Kalem has announced the plans for many of the releases to follow in this one-reel series featuring George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby.

Nance O'Neill (McClure Pictures)

"The Missing Heiress" is issued through the General Film Company on Friday, October 27. Work has now started on the third episode, "The Pencil Clue," which is scheduled to be issued on Friday, November 3. In this episode George Larkin, as Tommy Grant, police reporter of the Chronicle, unravels a puzzling murder mystery. The "thrill scene" that comes as the climax of the single reeler shows Dare Devil Larkin leaping from the first story window of a building into the tonneau of a speeding automobile.

The week following, on November 10, Kalem lists "The Rogue's Pawn," as the "Grant" release. In this episode Ollie Kirkby is given one of the strongest roles afforded her in the new series.

Robert Ellis, William McKey, G. Chira, Arthur Albertson and Mary Taylor-Ross are others who will be seen in the action of these episodes of the Kalem series. The productions are being made at Jacksonville, under the direction of Robert Ellis.

Pre-release showings of the first episode, "The Code Letter," are being given to exhibitors throughout the country at all the General Film exchanges and many letters of praise have been received at the Kalem offices.

VALKYRIEN ON PATHE PROGRAM NOVEMBER 5

The Thanhouser Film Corporation, announces that "Hidden Valley," starring Valkyrien (Baroness Dewitz), will be released through the Pathe exchanges on November 5. Boyd Marshall is the leading man in the feature, which is a story of a heathen tribe in South Africa that captures an American girl and makes her their "white goddess."

"Adventures of Dorothy Dare" Is "Fashion Drama" Series to Be Produced to Be Released by International

WITHIN a few weeks the International will present, in a series of episodes, "The Adventures of Dorothy Dare." Each episode will be complete in one reel and will combine a story of adventure with a display of the latest modes.

For some time past, the International has been producing fashions on an elaborate scale, but on only 500 feet in length. There was a story in each of them, among the most successful having been "Fashions D'Art," "A Modern Cinderella," "Anywoman," "Beauty and the Beast," and "The Saleslady's Dream." Because of their success, the International conceived the idea of the independent fashion drama of a full reel.

The title of the first episode of "The Adventures of Dorothy Dare," will be "It's Never Too Late." Dorothy Dare, secret agent of the Department of Justice, is seated at a table in a tea garden when she sees a smartly dressed girl with an elderly prosperous looking man. Dorothy remarks her beauty and her stylish gown.

The following day Dorothy goes shopping. In the gown department of a big store Dorothy is amazed to recognize in the saleslady the girl she saw the day before.

Dorothy is shown many suits and gowns on living models. She recognizes one of the suits as the same the girl wore at the tea garden. Dorothy buys a dress and then goes to the office of the superintendent, finds out the name and address of the young girl. The next scene shows the salesgirl taking one of the gowns at which Dorothy had been looking and conceal it under her dress. Dorothy returns to the salesroom and tells the girl she has changed her mind and would like to look at the dress again. The salesgirl says the dress has just been sold.

Dorothy is greatly disappointed and leaves. At the closing hour Dorothy waits near the employees' exit and follows the girl. A good looking young mechanic approaches the girl and attempts to speak to her but she tries to evade him. Dorothy hears the girl tell the man they can never be married as she wants a man of wealth. As the girl goes away, Dorothy approaches the young man and tells him of what she has seen. They resolve to work together to save the girl.

That evening Dorothy and the girl's sweetheart see her meet the elderly man and get into a machine with him. She has on the gown that Dorothy wanted to buy, having "borrowed" it from the store. Dorothy and the young man follow in a taxi.

The girl and the man alight at a road house. Dorothy and her companion peer through the window and see the elderly man put knockout drops in the girl's drink. They burst into the room just in time to save her. There is a terrific fight between the two men. In the excitement the borrowed dress has been ruined.

Dorothy and the young man take the girl back to her home. There the girl breaks down, cries and confesses the theft of the gown. Dorothy brings the story to a happy ending by telling the girl she will purchase the dress herself if she promises to marry her sweetheart and give up the false life she has been leading. Dorothy Dare makes her exit leaving the lovers in each other's arms.

Mineta Timaye appears in all the episodes in the part of Dorothy Dare. The supporting cast changes in each episode.

"Miss George Washington" Is First Vehicle for Marguerite Clark Under New Famous Players Contract

Marguerite Clark in "Miss George Washington," from Famous Players

"MISS GEORGE WASHINGTON," the story of a girl who could not tell the truth, is the title of the first photoplay selected for Marguerite Clark, by the Famous Players Film Company, since the renewal of her contract announced last week.

Berenice Somers, the character played by Miss Clark, is dubbed "Miss George Washington" by her friends after she has successfully fooled the members of the George Washington Truth Society into presenting her with a medal for never having told a lie. As her intimate friends know very well, Berenice is one of the most adroit spinners of fables that ever was born. It is one of these fanciful utterances of her that precipitated the trouble in this photoplay.

Rather than tell the truth to the parents of her school chum, Alice Altwold, when they are caught in a compromising situation in a hotel with a young man whom they have never met before, she introduces the stranger as her husband! Of course, she has no suspicion that she will ever see him again, but very gladly accepts the invitation of the Altwolds to visit them. Mr. Altwold is a celebrated international lawyer, and when Cleverly Trafton, the stranger, who is in the diplomatic corps, strikes a knotty problem, he is advised to consult with Altwold. He arrives at the lawyer's house shortly after Berenice has explained that her "husband" has been called away.

Berenice is completely taken aback by the arrival of Trafton, and makes an appealing sign for help, which he answers by saying that he was recalled by wireless. But when it comes time to retire, Berenice is brought face to face with the frightfully embarrassing situation of a single guest room and a supposedly devoted husband. Escaping to Alice's room, while her "husband" sneaks out on the balcony of the spare room to spend the night, Berenice is finally forced to confront Trafton and the entire Altwold family in the hallway, when the fact that the spare room is empty is discovered by Mr. Altwold. With rare presence of mind, Berenice stages a quarrel with her "husband" and escapes into Alice's room again, where she succeeds in remaining for the night in spite of anything and everything.

In the morning the "unhappy pair" are coerced into a mock reconciliation in the midst of which Berenice's real fiance appears. He is furious at the sight of Berenice in the arms of another man, supposedly his friend, for they have known each other for years, and is only restrained from making a frightful scene by the quick wit of Berenice coming to the rescue in the nick of time.

J. Searle Dawley, who is directing the picture, has engaged several notables in support of Miss Clark, including Frank Losee, Niles Welch, Florence Marten, Joseph Gleason, Maude Turner Gordon, "Billy" Watson and Herbert Prior.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

A TRUE reproduction of a resort of the Parisian Apaches will be seen in Mme. Petrova's new feature production, "The Black Butterfly," a forthcoming Metro picture. Mme. Petrova herself, with the aid of her cameraman, Andre Barlitier, staged and directed the scene at the Popular Plays and Players studio. The scene represented is the Caveau, where Apaches and their companions drink, dine and dance.

Real Apache dancing is given by artists of the first rank. Emile Agoust and his wife, Simone de Beryl, were engaged to do the feature dancing, and they contribute a sensational dancing duet. Mlle. de Beryl's make-up as a gigolette is a triumph. She realizes Paris for the spectator. Another gamin dance is done by Lula Paleaologus and Fred von Stange, in which a carefully staged fall brings Mlle. Paleaologus' hair down about her ears in a picturesque manner.

The costuming of the scene is colorful and realistic, and faithful in its absolute accuracy. This feature of the production was handled by Henriette Bizeul, who was for seven years at the Metropolitan Opera House and formerly with the Eclair Film Company of Paris.

In the Rolfe studio Julius Steger has begun the production of a new Metro play. Mr. Steger, in the star role, is seen as a poor and struggling young playwright, and the part is admirably adapted to his rare talents. No name has yet been selected for the production.

Stark Resigns from Metro

George D. Baker, one of the Metro-Rolfe directors, has returned to the Rolfe studio from a vacation spent in Havana. Mr. Baker at once began making arrangements for a screen production of Holman F. Day's story, "Squire Flynn," with Lionel Barrymore as the star of the picture.

Lowell Stark has resigned from the scenario department of Metro Pictures Corporation to accept a position as traveling director for the People's Motion Picture Company. Mr. Stark will superintend the conducting of popularity contests at theatres throughout several states, and will be the final judge as to successful candidates. Mr. Stark will be accompanied by an assistant, a camerman, and an assistant cameraman.

In order to make the scenes in "The Breaker" as realistic as possible, President George K. Spoor of Essanay engaged the services of Captain Michael P. Evans, chief of the Chicago bureau of identification and well known all over the United States as an expert in the Bertillon system, together with his son, assistant identification inspector, and several headquarters detectives to take part in the play.

"The Breaker" is a five-act feature, written by Arthur Stringer and featuring Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig. It deals with a counterfeiter band and the capture of the members by the police. Captain Evans works through several scenes, reproducing the exact methods of the police in taking records of criminals by the Bertillon system. He also follows out his clews thus received in capturing members of the band.

The well known novelist and newspaper writer, Anna Steese Richardson, has sold a scenario to the Popular Plays and Players studio for the use of Mme. Petrova. Mme. Petrova describes the story as one of the most powerful which has ever been submitted to her. It will be put in production at an early date.

When Tweedledum was in New York recently with Billy Dunn, his director, he was much attracted by the sight of the new autopede machines, which he saw being exhibited on Broadway, and he promptly persuaded Dunn to purchase a couple of machines and have them shipped to Jacksonville for use in a new comedy.

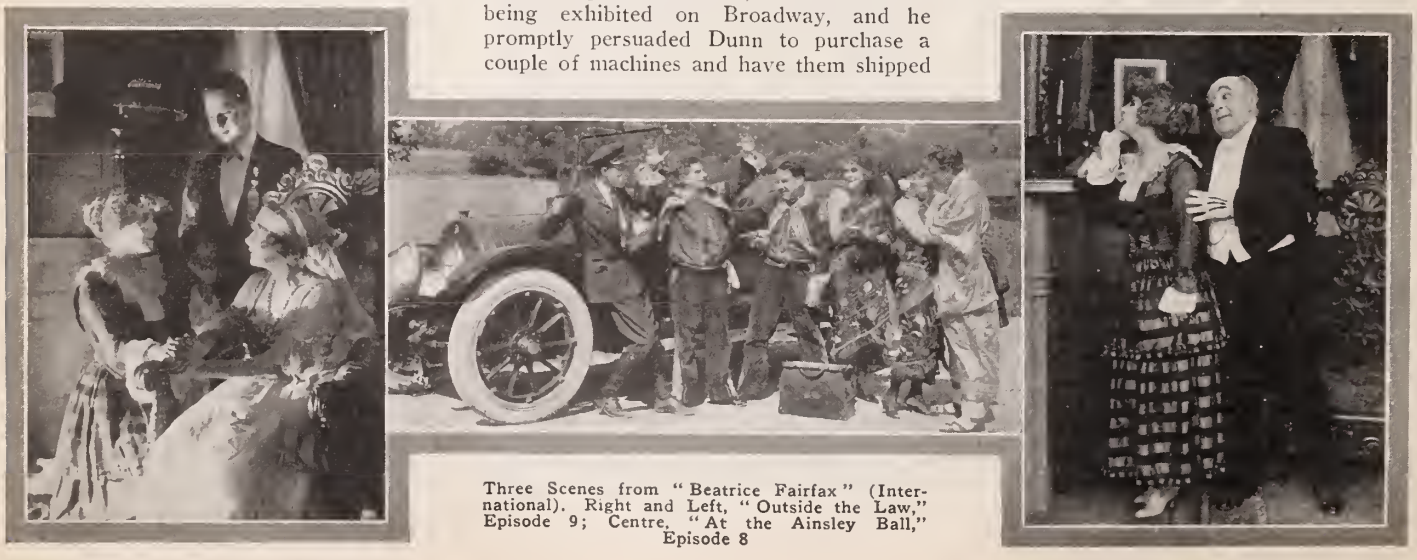
Tweedledum made his greatest reputation in the old Eclipse comedy, called "The Near-Sighted Cyclist," so that by using an autopede he simply brings himself up to the minute in appliances and a screaming comedy is expected.

Two Directors Kept Busy by Mme. Petrova

With her passion for efficiency and system Mme. Petrova has evolved a working schedule at the Popular Plays and Players studio by which she will keep two directors busy all the time on the Petrova productions. At the same time she herself will not waste precious days in idleness between any two pictures. Burton L. King and Edmund Lawrence are the directors now working on her new tandem system.

The plan works in this way. On Saturday Mme. Petrova, with Mr. King directing, finished the important scenes in which she herself appears in "The Black Butterfly." Mr. King then proceeded to take the less important scenes, in which she does not appear, and began the work of assembling and cutting the film. On Monday, with Mr. Lawrence as director, the star began work on her next production, a feminist play as yet unnamed, from the pen of the well known writer, Anna Steese Richardson.

Associated with Mme. Petrova in the strongest scenes in the new photodrama will be Mahlon Hamilton and William Davidson, both of whom have appeared in a great many Metro pictures. When the star and the leading members of her support have completed their work in the Richardson picture, they will go on without loss of time to the next, which Mr. King, having completed work on "The Black Butterfly," will by then be in a position to handle, Mr. Lawrence finishing work on the Richardson story.



Three Scenes from "Beatrice Fairfax" (International). Right and Left, "Outside the Law," Episode 9; Centre, "At the Ainsley Ball," Episode 8

The Garrick Studios Company of Jacksonville have secured a ninety-nine year lease on the roof of the Union Terminal Building, and will at once start erecting one of the most modern studios in the United States. The company will have their stages erected on a space 600 feet long by 120 feet wide, and when completed will be able to accommodate 25 companies working at the same time. Mr. Richard Garrick, formerly manager of the Jacksonville studios of the Gaumont Company, is general manager of the company, which is also closely allied with the South Eastern Film Corporation.

The company have also secured a lease on the Gaumont studio in this city, which it will use until its plant is completed and ready for occupancy.

Frank Daniels is working in a new style comedy under the direction of Van Dyke Brooke. He received a royal welcome from the players upon his return to the Vitagraph studio last week from an extended vacation.

Paul Scardon is finishing the final scenes of "The Little Brown Sparrow," a drama for release on Greater Vitagraph's program. Antonio Moreno, Peggy Hyland, Helen and Bobby Connelly, Eulalie Jensen, John Robertson, Mildred Platz and Jack Ellis are in the cast. One of the principal reasons for speed in this production is Mr. Moreno's haste to get away and join Edith Storey at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood.

Lawrence Semon, comedy director is working night and day whipping into shape comedies that he writes in collaboration with Graham Baker, which are to be released on the Greater Vitagraph program.

Director S. Rankin Drew has practically finished "The Girl Philippa," Robert W. Chambers's popular novel with Anita Stewart as Philippa.

Director Charles Brabin has returned from a long trip with his company of players in the Louis Joseph Vance serial, "The Secret Kingdom." After using the schooner that he raised from the harbor off Long Island, where it had lain in the mud for several years and refitting it, he recently planted several dynamite charges beneath its decks and blew it to smithereens. Charles Richman and William Dunn have their work cut out for them in this monster serial which will likely be released shortly after the new year.

Bad Weather Holds Back "V" Production

The uncertain weather of the past two weeks has seriously interfered with the work of the Vitagraph productions, numerous people being confined to their homes suffering from colds. Anita Stewart and Earle Williams have been absent for several days; Rose Tapley was quite seriously ill for two weeks but has returned to the studio.

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton's "The Battle Cry of War" is fast nearing completion. This production is a logical sequel to "The Battle Cry of Peace," and marks Alice Joyce's return to the screen. Harry T. Morey is the American commander. Prominent also in the cast are Peggy Hyland, Naomi Childers, Bobby Connelly, James Morrison, Joseph Kilgour and Walter McGrail.

Virginia Pearson in "The War Bride's Secret" (Fox)

Some scenes for "Her Beloved Enemy," a Thanhouser feature starring Doris Grey and Wayne Arey, recently were made by Director Ernest Warde on an estate on the Hudson River, provided by Doris Grey, who had known the daughter of the owner in a Boston academy.

When the negative was developed several scenes had been ruined by static and Mr. Warde took his company back to the estate. The gardener, fearing the approach of frost, had taken up a great deal of the shrubbery. Through Doris' influence he was ordered to put it all back, and the retakes were made. It's rather handy for a director to have a star who has wealthy friends.

A background for a scene in a James Oliver Curwood story starring Earle Williams, which is being directed by Marguerite Bertsch, calls for a large winding stairway in a department store.

Mary Charleson (Essanay)

The stairway and encircling balcony which has been erected for this feature is an exact reproduction of the stairway and rotunda in the large department store of John Wanamaker in New York City.

The set which is now being used occupies the entire No. 5 studio of that company in Flatbush and cost approximately $2,000 to build. It will be used in but a few scenes, not over 200 feet of negative in all.

Little Ethelmary Oakland, the diminutive Thanhouser-Pathe star, has just finished posing for a full length portrait by Emil Fuchs, who until the war broke out, was portrait painter to the King of England. This painting of Ethelmary shows the beautiful blonde child in one of her serious moods, with hands crossed in her lap, looking dreamily into space. She is dressed in a shimmery olive green silk old-fashioned mother hubbard with a quaint tam-o-shanter of the same color and material, edged in fur. The portrait will be sent to Mr. Fuchs' exhibitions in Cleveland, Detroit, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, and several other cities, and will then be shown later this winter at Reinhardt's gallery in New York.

Eugene Walter, the playwright, drove out to the Thanhouser studio in New Rochelle the other day with Charlotte Walker, his wife, who is now a Thanhouser star.

Frederic Sullivan was making an elaborate fancy dress ball scene for Florence La Badie's feature, "Divorce and the Daughter." Just for fun Mr. Walter donned a costume and appeared in the scene with 100 other extras. Mr. Walter is the man with the whiskers. They're the only false thing in this story.

"The Truant Soul"

The filming of "The Truant Soul," Essanay's 7-act feature for Henry B. Walthall, is now well under way, 150 exterior scenes having been completed and studio work begun. Mr. Walthall, Mary Charleson, his leading woman, Director Harry Beaumont and company have returned from Wisconsin where the out-of-door scenes were taken.

The first booking on the feature has been received from a municipality, Mayor D. E. Smith, of Richland Center, Wis., has applied to President George K. Spoor for first run on the superfeature. The city council intends to show it in the municipal opera house. The mayor reports that reservations up to capacity have already been received. The exterior scenes were taken in and about this little mountaain town in Wisconsin, which lies entirely surrounded by massive hills, just the locality required. It was virgin territory for the camera, and each day the entire population followed the actors into the hills to watch the filming.

The first interior set required the duplication of an operating amphitheatre, and photographs were taken of the one in Mercy Hospital, Chicago, where the late Dr. John B. Murphy performed his marvelous work. This was duplicated exactly and for the student spectators the senior medical class of the University of Chicago participated. In the pit with Mr.

Walthall, playing the part of a master surgeon, were Chicago specialists, obtained to play in the picture so that its realism would be above question.

The most recent addition to the International's roster of screen stars is Miss Evelyn Fariss, a young Southern girl. Miss Fariss will appear in several of the episodes of "Beatrice Fairfax," in support of Harry Fox and Grace Darling. She is but 18 years old and was born in Chattanooga, Tenn. She was educated at private schools in Louisville, Ky., where she afterwards lived, finishing at the Sweetwater Academy, at Sweetwater, Tenn.

Three years ago, Miss Fariss came to New York, and two weeks after her arrival made her stage debut as a member of the cast of "High Jinks." She was so successful that she was placed under contract by Oliver Morosco and appeared in "Pretty Mrs. Smith."

Miss Fariss then went into motion pictures, playing prominent parts in "Jim, the Penman," "The Masqueraders," "The Morals of Marcus," and "The Little Beggar." Just prior to joining the International organization, she appeared as co-star with Thomas Wise in "The Magic Bottle."

Hattie Delaro has been engaged to play the part of the housekeeper in "The Sunbeam," the Metro-Rolfe feature play chosen for Mabel Taliaferro as a successor to "The Dawn of Love." Miss Delaro, who is well known both to stage and screen, having played in every branch of the profession both here and abroad, has also been seen in "The Quitter," "The Upheaval," and other Metro productions.

The Shaker play, "The Gates of Eden," in which Viola Dana will soon appear on the Metro program, is from the pen of a clergyman, Rev. William E. Danforth, now of Indianapolis, but formerly of Chicago. Mr. Danforth has made a life-long study of Shakerdom. John H. Collins is directing the feature production.

Cabanne Has Personal Staff

W. Christy Cabanne, who will direct the fourteen-episode serial in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will be starred for the Metro program, brought his own personal staff of assistants with him from California to New York. Eugene Thurston will be his assistant director, R. J. Huntington his business manager, Millie Richter, film cutter, and William Fildew, cameraman. They have already assisted him in the production of "Love, Honor and Obey," a five-reel photodrama, in which Frances Nelson is the star.

Pierre Le May, leading man in Metro productions, has arranged to appear in a Broadway stage production which will not necessitate his leaving New York. He was cast for a prominent role in one of Willard Mack's new plays, but gave it up when he found that he would have to go to Chicago where the play will have its premiere. He will now be able to continue his work on the screen during his New York engagement.

Harold Entwistle, who plays Wilfred Templeton, the father, in the first Metro wonder play, entitled "Love, Honor and Obey," directed by W. Christy Cabanne, is himself a director, having acted in that capacity for the California Motion Picture Corporation. Frances Nelson is starred, and Niles Welch featured, in the new production.

In "The Honor of the Waynes," starring Robert Warwick, the male character of second importance will be played by Henry Hull, the young actor who has attracted remarkably favorable comment by his interpretation of the leading part in "The Man Who Came Back," at the Playhouse. This will be Mr. Hull's first appearance as a motion picture player. Emile Chautard is directing "The Honor of the Waynes" for the World Film Corporation.

"The Gilded Cage," new World-Brady picture, with Alice Brady in the star role, recounts the stirring adventures of a young princess reared in a convent and on a moment's notice called to the throne through the assassination of her father and mother, the king and queen. Completely innocent of every form of guile, she is plunged headlong into the intrigue and miscellaneous wickedness of the court, and, disguising herself as a peasant girl, she goes out among the people to learn the secret of their discontent. While thus engaged she encounters many perils, and for a time loses her liberty, but in the end gains a true lover and recovers her throne.

Story of "The Hidden Scar"

In "The Hidden Scar," starring Holbrook Blinn and Ethel Clayton, the heroine is a beautiful young cabaret dancer, who fancies she is without a heart and goes the pace. Through inheritance from an elderly rounder who has been fond of her, she becomes the owner of a residence in a rural community, puts the gay life behind her and falls in love with a minister's son, whom she marries.

When the real facts become known to the husband and his parents, the application of the Saviour's teachings becomes a very big problem in the household, and many emotional moments follow. The crisis in the lives of husband and wife is turned toward their future happiness through the earnest efforts of a free-thinker, impersonated with much force by Mr. Blinn. A Brady-Made World Film photoplay.

The principal character of "The Man Who Forgot," to be played by Robert Warwick for the World-Brady pictures, is a hard drinker who goes on a desperate spree and loses his identity. He then becomes an ardent and effective prohibitionist, enters Congress and leads the movement to which he is attached. In one scene he harangues a great throng from the Capitol steps, and for photographing this episode the World people advertised in the Washington newspapers inviting the public to participate in a motion picture.

It is not easy to secure permission from the War Department to use a camera in or near any United States fortification. Edward Jose, of the Astra, found that to be true when he wanted to stage some scenes with Pearl White in an army setting for the new Pathe serial, "Pearl of the Army." After pulling many wires, Mr. Jose at last secured permission to use Fort Wadsworth on Staten Island, and furthermore he was able to get the garrison in his scenes.

Among the most elaborate scenes in "An Enemy to the King," in which E. H. Sothern has been working as star for the Greater Vitagraph, was that filmed the other day in a representation of the court of King Henry III. of France. The accessories employed to add to the atmosphere of effete royalty included all sorts of animals—monkeys in gold-laced jackets, brightly plumaged macaws, falcons, pheasants, Arabian horses, Shetland ponies and dogs. The dogs included all fancy breeds.

Probably the star of the canine galaxy was a tiny Blenheim spaniel, Hentzal's Star Turn of Rosemary, owned in Larchmont, N. J. This dog was never defeated in bench shows, and is valued at $5,000. The little mite turned its nose contemptuously up at the other dogs present, although there were Russian wolfhounds there quoted with a $1,000 pedigree apiece.

In her next release after "The Enemy," the English film star, Peggy Hyland, will exhibit her piquant arts in crinoline. Under the direction of Paul Scardon, she is working in an Arthur Train drama of the Civil War period with Antonio Moreno. In this play she fairly revels in the most fetching old-fashioned costumes imaginable. She is surrounded also with a bevy of other sweet young things, each in styles of 1864 that makes many of the other scenes suggest a plate from the long obsolete journal of fashion, Godey's Lady's Book.

Charles Race, it happens, is the best dancer in Ithaca, and some say, in many counties. Likewise he is as tall as Mr. Sills. Race did so well that Mrs. Castle complimented him upon his work. He is the only partner with whom she has danced since her husband joined the British Royal Aviation Corps.

A Demure Little Quaker

From a Quaker's boarding school to stardom in the motion picture was the big jump made by Betty Howe, who is appearing with Harry Fox and Grace Darling in several of the episodes of "Beatrice Fairfax," the series of the International.

Miss Howe was born in New York City. She spent her girlhood at Bayside, and during the summer months wore a bathing suit practically all the time, swimming, canoeing and yachting. She was a demure little girl, and it was quite fitting that she should be sent to a Quaker boarding school at Chappaqua, N. Y. She remained there two years, and when she was graduated had never been inside of a theatre.

One night she attended a motion picture performance. She was so enthralled that the following day she applied to a motion picture company for a position. A "test" was made of her, and it was so successful that she was immediately engaged as co-star with Frank Daniels in a series of comedies.

Miss Carroll McComas, who is playing the leading part in "Seven Chances," now appearing at the Cohan theatre in New York, is the latest acquisition to the International's fashion stars. Miss McComas, in addition to her work in the spoken drama, is posing in the latest creations for the Hearst International News Pictorial. Others of the International fashion stars are the Dolly Sisters, Olive Thomas, Beth Lydey, Marion Davies, Dolly Hackett and Mineta Timayo.

Barnett Parker, who is Asterbilt in "Prudence, the Pirate," the Thanhouser feature starring Gladys Hulette, released through the Pathe exchanges, has been successful in every branch of the dramatic profession.

He has supported George Alexander, Marie Tempest, Billie Burke and Lou Tellegen in comedies and dramas. He had an important part in "Hobson's Choice," the successful Scotch play, and has been in musical comedy and in motion pictures.

Theda Bara as an Angel

Jose Ruchti, the distinguished Cleveland artist who has painted the royal family of Germany, the Archduke Franz Ferdinand, assassinated in 1914, and many other notables, is now in New York City to make a great canvas painting of Theda Bara.

In order to show Miss Bara's charms as he sees them, Mr. Ruchti will paint her picture in heroic size and exhibit it throughout the country. He has already completed preliminary sketches from photographs of Miss Bara and will make the final canvas in Cleveland. It will measure twelve by fourteen feet. Mr. Ruchti said: "I shall paint Miss Bara, in the garb of an angel, with a flaming sword thrust into the ground. The foreground will be done in plastic with shadows seemingly from the form painted on it."

Dr. Harry A. Lawton, wealthy retired physician of Warren and Cleveland, will be seen as the judge. A. R. McCreary, chief engineer of the Crowell-Lundoff-Little Company, and one of the "men who built the Stillman theatre," will also have a part in "Ignorance."

Work on the exterior scenes for the picture actually commenced Monday. M. F. Bramley has offered the use of his beautiful home and grounds on Lake avenue for outdoor scenes. Work in the studio will immediately follow.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, Oct. 14.

IT is estimated that weather conditions in and about Los Angeles last week caused a loss of approximately $30,000 to motion picture companies, as fully half of the time it was impossible to work. One entire day was lost and on other days the light was such that but two or three hours was all the cameramen could shoot.

This is the first severe storm period of the season, and coming fully thirty days earlier this year than last, it found many of the studios unprepared for rain. In several instances large sets were damaged.

All studios suffered to a more or less extent from loss because of water destroying sets with the exception of the Ince plant at Culver City, where all stages are inclosed. In one of two instances the time was not wholly lost, as the rain gave technical departments opportunity to catch up with the producing companies. The total rainfall for Los Angeles since April is less than two inches.

Cries for sunshiny weather arise not only from the studios in the immediate vicinity of Los Angeles, but from the Yosemite Valley last week came a wail. The Signal Film Corporation producing company making "The Lass of the Lumberlands," has been at the Yosemite Valley for almost three weeks, and have had but six days of weather suitable for picture making. When they arrived there, the weather observers of the vicinity told them no rain ever fell there until late in November, and now on every hand the native sons tell them the early fall of rain is "unusual."

The players having been unable to work have put in part of the time to advantage in scouring the country for suitable locations, and in fishing and deer hunting. Miss Helen Holmes is accredited with killing her first deer, the actress having shot it while going to Chinquapin Falls. It is spoken of as a two point buck.

Two hunters in the vicinity have offered to trap for the Signal Company a black bear, and expect to deliver it to the players within a few days. They made this promise to show their appreciation of the services rendered the wife of one of the hunters, when she fell and sprained her ankle. The nearest physician was miles away, and members of the company experienced in bandaging sprains, gave aid.

Director J. P. McGowan has been granted the use of the Yosemite Valley Lumber Company's camps, and the use of their incline railway for filming scenes. The railroad is 8700 feet in length, and in that distance rises to an altitude of 3400 feet above the starting point. It is used exclusively for "snaking" logs from the point where they are cut to the mills at Merced Falls. The use of this railway and the several camps of the company will give to the Signal Company very excellent locations, and permit the making of ideal scenes for "The Lass of The Lumberlands" serial.

Director George H. Melford has taken up the filming of "The Yellow Pawn" for Lasky. This is a modern story and will have Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid as co-stars.

Lou-Tellegen has completed work in his last subject, "The Black Wolf," and returned to the east last week, where he had an engagement to play the season in "The King of Nowhere," which opens in Baltimore.

"Each to His Kind"

Another new subject put into production at the Lasky studio this week was "Each to His Kind," an adaptation from the Paul West story of the same name. This stars Sessue Hayakawa, and is being made under the direction of E. J. LeSaint.

Director Frank Reicher has begun the filming of "Betty of the Orange Country," which gives to Fannie Ward a star part, that requires overalls as the principal part of her wardrobe.

Theodore Roberts, Elliott Dexter, and others of the Lasky stock have been cast to support Mae Murray in her starring vehicle now being made by Robert Leonard. In this photodrama, Miss Murray dons a pair of Roberts' trousers and disappears. There is much speculation at the studio as to how she will fill these, Miss Murray being referred to in face parlance as a "half portion," and Roberts in the same vernacular as "club size."

Walter Stradling has returned to the Lasky studio after a series of flits back and forth across the continent. A short time ago he was sent east, and after being there a few days was returned to the west coast. Upon his arrival at Hollywood, he was handed a telegram to report immediately in New York. He went there and photographed one Mary Pickford picture, and now he has returned to the coast.

Tom Meighan, who was recently starred in his first Lasky subject and since has played with Blanche Sweet in "The Silent Partner," being filmed under the direction of Marshall Neilan, will as soon as this play is finished, leave for the east where he will play at the eastern studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Hobart Bosworth and Tully Marshall have both made long term contracts for exclusive appearance in Lasky productions, and Lillian Brown Leighton has also been added to the Lasky stock organization.

General Manager Milton E. Hoffman of the Lasky plant, found time to take two days' vacation, the first in two years, and sought recreation away from picture making by a motor trip to San Diego. During the two days he frequently caught himself making notes of this or that spot as desirable ones for location use, and before the first day was over, he gave up trying to forget studio matters, and came to the conclusion that "it can't be done."

The Continental Producing Company, making "The Spirit of '76," has leased the Crown City Film Company's laboratory, Pasadena, and for the present will continue using the Pacific Film Laboratory studio. This change was made necessary because of the burning of the laboratory of the latter company. The producing organization is still in the vicinity of the Yosemite Valley.

Director Colin Campbell and E. A. Martin are leaving for the east the first of the coming week. Mr. Campbell will there supervise the laboratory work on "The Garden of Allah"; and Director Martin, who has just finished filming "The Light of Western Stars," will take up the making of a historical subject for the Selig Company.

With both of these subjects completed, Tom Mix is to again resume his work as director and actor in the making of Selig western pictures.

The next release of the Christie comedies will be of the nature of a topical subject, although it is purely a comedy. The title of this is "What's In A Name," and deals with a young man who sought recreation at a beach under the assumed name of Jones. The father of the girl with whom he becomes infatuated, had previously had some experience with a man named Jones and had lost some wealth as the result. For that reason he disliked any one by the name of Jones.

He refused his daughter permission to see the young man, and the couple elope, are wedded, and board a steamer for another city following an exciting chase. On the steamer they disguise as sailors to escape from the father who has come aboard. When later arrested, the youth divulges his real name, and all ends happily.

The Christie company made a trip aboard the S. S. Congress in the making of the water scenes, and the pictures taken on board, were the last made before the vessel was burned. The company left the steamer at San Francisco, and a few hours later it was totally destroyed. The Christie organization has made eight or nine trips on this boat, and consequently knew practically all the officers of the crew. Captain Cousins, who was the last man to leave the burning boat, is but one day older, and two pounds lighter than Harry Rattenberry of the Christie stock, who in all instances played the part of the captain, wearing Cousin's uniforms. Rattenberry accompanied the Christie players on this trip and appeared with Captain Cousins the last time he was photographed.

Everything goes in pairs this week at the Christie plant, both directors Al. E. Christie and Horace Davey are working together in the filming of a one-reel comedy, likewise two assistant directors are on the job. The story pertains to two tramps, two juveniles, two fathers, and two sweethearts, and is titled, "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp." H. P. Hagenah is author of the story. Two fathers offer their sons who are away at dramatic school, a prize of $1,000, if upon completion of their course, they would return home in disguises in which their parents could not recognize them. On the day the youths are to arrive, two tramps appear in the village, and the fathers dine them and turn over the $1,000 prize, only to find out later that they had made a grave mistake.

Myrtle Gonzales and Val Paul in Universal's "The End of the Rainbow"

The principals of both the Christie companies are playing in this single reeler, giving it a cast of ten principals.

"Dollars and Sense"

Ora Carew takes a dual role of a girl and her twin brother in the Keystone "Dollars and Sense," which has just been completed by Walter Wright. Joseph "Baldy" Belmont appears as her rural lover; Nick Cogley the father, proprietor of a small town inn; Blanche Payson, his wife; Mal St. Clair, an Englishman who is to wed the girl, and Joseph Callahan the scheming lawyer. The innkeeper's daughter and the Englishman are left a fortune provided they marry, and he employes a lawyer to help bring about the match. The girl's twin brother disguises and takes her place, and by the aid of a bear and the rural lover, forces the Englishman to relinquish the fortune and the girl. The picture will have several speedy chases, and dives from a cliff will serve as thrillers.

Count H. D'Elba and Countess Du Cello (Universal)

"Haystacks and Steeples" is another Keystone subject completed which has Gloria Swanson as the girl, Reggie Morris the fortune hunter, and Bobbie Vernon the country lover. The subject was made by Director Clarence Badger. Gloria lives with her aunt who attempts to induce her to marry Reggie, supposed to be wealthy. The country boy plays the part of a detective and learns of the double life of the fortune hunter, and makes an expose just as the wedding ceremony is commenced. The subject abounds with melodramatic situations, all of which are staged in a burlesque style.

One of the large Keystone stages has been converted into the bed of the ocean, and Chester Conklin and Guy Woodward have become proficient as fish in their work on this for the forthcoming subject, "The Tug Boat Romeos," being made by William Campbell and Harry Williams.

Fred Mace in a "Keystone"

Fred Mace has the leading part in "His Last Scent," a new Keystone shortly to be released. He takes the role of a business man who would rather flirt than eat, and it gets him into all kinds of trouble. Many of the scenes were made in the Yosemite Valley of California, and at beach resorts. Mace is supported by Alice Davenport as his wife, Cecil Arnold stenographer, Fritz Schade the stenographer's husband, and "Slippery Slim" Victor Potel, the detective.

It so happened last week that no new Fine Arts productions had been commenced, all six of the producing organizations being busy.

Director Paul Powell is making the final scenes for the W. E. Wing psychological story with gentlemen, gentlewomen and germs as principals. This is temporarily known as "Bugs."

Director Lloyd Ingraham has "The Children Pay" in production, and Eddie Dillon is making the last scenes for "The Lady Drummer" which features Fay Tincher.

"The Feud Breakers" is in production under the direction of Joseph Hénabery; and Chet Withey and a company are at San Francisco making harbor scenes for "The Wharf Rat."

Winifred Westover, a San Francisco girl and daughter of a former San Francisco sporting editor, won laurels in a fight scene staged for "Bugs" this week. She appears as the hired girl at a small town home, and when a half-wit hired man attempts to kiss her, she gives him a left swing that would cause Freddie Welsh to feel jealous in his palmiest days. Monte Blue was the recipient of this fistic compliment.

One of the thrillers of "The Wharf Rat" will be the headlong plunge from an ocean liner to the water, made by Mae Marsh. The scene was staged at Los Angeles harbor, and was filmed from a gasoline launch from which Chet Withey directed the operations. Miss Marsh, after the dip in the ocean, was picked up by the launch none the worse for the experience. Following this the company departed for San Francisco. Those in the party besides the director and star were Mrs. Marsh, Robert Harron, Spottiswoode Aitken and Josephine Crowell.

The filming of the Yorke-Metro subject "Big Tremaine," starring Harold Lockwood and May Allison, has been completed, and within a day or two will be shipped east.

With the subject out of the way, Director Henry Otto will make a screen version of Harold McGrath's "Pidgin Island." Scenario has been in preparation for the past several weeks, Richard Spencer, former writer at the Ince studio, President F. J. Balshofer and Director Otto collaborating in the preparation of the script. Mr. Balshofer has spent several days selecting types for the new photodrama, and the cast will be completed within a day or two.

They Want to See More of Him

The most recent release, "Mr. 44," has resulted in the players receiving a large number of complimentary letters from exhibitors and fans. But the most emphatic that from I. F. Morris, manager of the Sequoia theatre at Sacramento, California. The letter in part says: "A happy combination like Harold Lockwood and May Allison, who symbolize youth, romance and beauty, is what my audience are continually clamoring for—give us more of their kind and my patrons will leave my theatre satisfied to return again next week. Harold Lockwood's smile is becoming as well known in Sacramento as the daily addresses of William Jennings Bryan."

A handsome combination interior and exterior set showing three sides of a southern home, and four interior rooms, was damaged to the extent of several hundred dollars at the Yorke studio last week by the heavy rains which fell a month in advance of previous years. The settings were left in the condition they were in when the company finished in the evening, and the following morning they presented a very bedraggled appearance.

House Peters (Morosco-Pallas)

The Yorke-Metro last week boasts of romance on and off the stage. A few weeks ago a party of young ladies visited the studio, and while there, one tripped and fell over a scenery brace. Roy Irwin, property man, aided her to her home in Pomona, via automobile. Two weeks later he announced his engagement, and this week they were wed. The girl was Miss Ada Miller. Many other members of the company are hoping the braces may prove stumbling blocks to others.

Steve Barton, who has been affiliated with many companies on the west coast, having come west with F. J. Balshofer at the time of 101 Bison and Miller Brothers Companies, has returned to the employment of Mr. Balshofer, and become assistant director to Henry Otto.

The Universal program subject titled "The Typewriter Ribbon," is being filmed by Director John McDermott. This is a detective story, and derives its title from a clue discovered by a detective. Lois Wilson is given the leading feminine part, Malcolm Blevins the heavy, and Kingsley Benedict appears as the detective.

Allen Holubar is directing the production of a two or three-reel subject which has a peculiar plot. A good cast has been given Mr. Holubar for this picture, the title of which is "Stronger Than Steel."

Director Fred Kelsey has just completed a one-reel story in which he himself takes the part of the heavy. A peculiar feature is that there are no feminine parts. The story deals with an honorably discharged soldier who attempts to buy the mount he rode in the army, but is unable to do so because of insufficient funds. Weeks later he sees a truck driver beat his horse unmercifully, and the soldier treats the driver in a similar manner, with the result that the champion of the horse is arrested. Before the judge he tells his story, and the court fixes the price on the horse that it may fall into his hands. L. M. Wells takes the part of the judge, and L. C. Shumway is the soldier.

Kelsey is now filming "Beauty's Official Business," being a little story of domestic life, pointing out the fact that wives should retain their attractiveness with respect to dress after marriage, but their failure to do so does not give the husband the right to invite guests without first advising the wife to that effect. Kelsey's triangle cast includes Agnes Vernon, M. K. Wilson, and Jay Belasco. The story is by Harvey Gates.

"The Pardon"

William Parker has prepared a two-reel scenario for Henry McRae titled "The Pardon." The characters include the bank teller and cashier, both in love with the president's daughter. McRae has J. Warren Kerrigan as teller, E. N. Wallock the cashier, and Edith Johnson the girl.

Another program subject of two or three reels, written and being produced by William V. Mong, is titled "In the Days of '49." Mong appears in the role of Kansas Reeves, a gambler, who finds on the desert a deserted wife. He takes her to the village, and there does all within his power to make her comfortable, forcing the inhabitants to respect her by the use of his gun. The gambler formerly having been infatuated with a dance hall girl, does not at first fully realize that he is falling in love with the woman he has found, and it is not until he learns she is to wed a successful prospector that he comes to realize his infatuation. Harry Holden is the prospector, Nellie Allen the girl. The heavy is taken by Frank Whitson.

"Soul's Bondage" is the two reel subject from story by Grace Litton and adapted for the screen by G. B. Anderson. It deals with the perfidy of a man with respect to a country girl, who, persecuted by her father, goes to the city. She follows the easy road, and the man she believes loves her, soon tires of her country ways and seeks another. He meets her sister, and is to wed her when the girls tells the father and sister how the man had betrayed her. The man weds the little mother, and years later when he aspires to an elective office of honor, he becomes infatuated with a maiden, and then learns that it is his own daughter. Roberta Wilson appears as the betrayed girl who later becomes wife, Charles Mailes the deceiver, and the supporting cast includes Louise Owens and others.

Ella Hall as Gabrielle in "We Are French," Now Being Filmed at "U" City

Alice Von Saxmar has prepared a scenario for "The Ivy and the Oak," which is being produced by Donald Macdonald. Because of an actress' past life, the man who loves her, refuses to take the marriage vows. He seeks a business career, and while engaged in this, attempts to win another. Lee Hill takes the featured part, Dorothy Davenport appears as the vampire, and Lillian Concord the actress.

"A Daughter of Caliente"

Director Douglas Gerrard has Ruth Stonehouse as his leading woman in the one-reel costume photoplay, "A Daughter of Caliente," written by Helen Jonas. Miss Stonehouse takes the name part, the prettiest girl of the village, who in seeking revenge for the brazen manner in which a captain has forced his love making upon her, dons boys clothes and acts as servant to him. While thus engaged she learns of his intention of betraying the government. The information she gives the higher officers brings about conviction of treason. Gerrard plays the lead opposite Miss Stonehouse, that of the sweetheart.

The five part detective series to be known as "The Voice on the Wire," is now in production. This series was written by J. Gruv Alexander, and is being produced by Stuart Paton, and gives Ben Wilson the featured part, that of a noted criminologist. In the first number of the series, a baffling murder myster is solved by the criminologist and professor, they finding that Ernie Shields appears in this as the juvenile, L. M. Wells the professor, and Neva Gerger takes the featured feminine part.

A Bluebird subject put in production this week under the direction of Joseph de Grasse, is titled "The Piper's Price." The studio of Superior Film Company, located near the heart of the Los Angeles business section, was last week fitted with additional artificial lighting equipment. The plant now has two batteries of overhead indirect arc lights, each battery consists of eighteen Winfield-Kerner fifty thousand candle power lamps. These are attached to movable trucks operated on overhead tracks making it possible for them to be moved to any portion of the handsome enclosed studios.

Herman Lucas, the only motion picture actor of the Los Angeles colony who is a member of the aeronautic section of the naval militia of California, has just returned from San Diego where he spent two weeks in the government aeronautic school. During this time Lucas made a number of flights, and on several of these piloted the machine occupied by himself and an army officer. His highest trip was up to 2,200 feet. Lucas' latest release was the Morosco-Pallas picture "The Parson of Panamint."

David Hartford, who for more than a year has served in the capacity of superintendent of production at the Ince Triangle studios, has resigned from the position to accept a similar one tendered him by V. R. Day for the Essanay Company. Mr. Hartford has spent his entire life in the show business, and is familiar with details of every class of amusement enterprise. Prior to becoming a member of the Ince staff, he was a producing manager of a local theatre. Mr. Hartford has left for a visit in the east, and at its conclusion will take up the new work at the Chicago Essanay studios.

Monte M. Katterjohn, former Ince writer, who has accepted the position of manager of production for Essanay, has departed for Chicago to take up his new work.

The Ince production, "War's Women," was booked for presentation at Tally's Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles, but Manager Tally feeling he should have the approval of the film by the officials of the city, gave a special showing to the municipal family. The officials refused to sanction the presentation, and the booking has been cancelled, after being on the books of the exchange for a number of weeks.

EXCITING JUNGLE SCENES BY POLLARD PLAYERS

Special to Motion Picture News.

San Diego, Oct. 5.

The Pollard Picture Players have been working in a veritable jungle in Mission Valley, near this city, this week, employing a large number of negro extras as well as a detachment of soldiers from the Twenty-first Infantry, which is encamped at the exposition.

The scenes taken have included skirmishes between the troops, and the negro natives of the mythical island of "Vergania," with Margarita Fischer having some very exciting experiences playing leads. Then, too, the voodoo ceremonies conducted at night, about a great pit dug in the river bottom, had much of the weird about them. In these ceremonies a monster Regal python from the E. & R. Jungle Film Company's studio in Los Angeles, brought down for the occasion by Vice-President J. S. Edwards, was used.

This snake measures 26 feet in length, and weighs about 250 pounds. In a hand-to-hand encounter with one of the negro natives, Jack Mower, playing the part of Capt. Crowne in the play, sustained a fractured rib, but pluckily stayed with the job, including the torture scenes in which he and Miss Fischer, as "Miss Jackie," hang over the snake-pit just prior to a rescue effected by a landing party from the captain's cruiser.

The entire company worked straight through Wednesday and Wednesday night, and then, after a brief rest, were at it again for Thursday night and all day Friday. For the night work powerful arc lights were installed near the jungle stage, the electrical equipment being taken to the scene by auto truck. Harry Pollard and Melvin Mayo have been directing the work. Miss Mabel Van Auker, sister of Cecil Van Auker, played the part of the voodoo priestess, this being her first engagement with the Pollard Players.

Myrtle Gonzales, Universal star, is enjoying a rest at Hotel del Coronado, accompanied by Mrs. I. G. Connor of Los Angeles.

Otis Turner of the Fox Film Company, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. George Walsh, is at Hotel del Coronado.

Clarke Irvine, scenario writer and staff correspondent, is in the city for a short stay, having come down from Los Angeles by auto.

Hotel del Coronado was the scene of a festive occasion last Saturday evening when the Pollard Picture Players participated in a bal masque. The camera men were on hand, together with a corps of electricians, and a number of scenes were filmed in connection with the story of "Miss Jackie," which is about completed at the Pollard studios in the exposition grounds. Margarita Fischer, Jack Mower, Joseph Harris, John Steppling, J. G. Russell and Beatrice Van of the Players Company mingled with the prominent society people in the dancing, occasionally pausing before the camera for some special feature which will be shown on the screen in the near future.

Joe Harris of the Pollard Players has won the right to use the title "matador" in connection with his name in view of his exploits in the bull-ring, having recently appeared in a scene in the arena at Tia Juana, Mexico, eighteen miles south of San Diego, in connection with the filming of "The Pearl of Paradise," which is soon to be released through the Mutual.

Philadelphia Exchanges Feel Force of Increasing Business—Pathe Feels Rush of Bookings

MANAGER H. M. OSBORN of Pathe in Philadelphia says that with one Gold Rooster weekly coming along now instead of monthly as formerly, the Quaker City office is crowing hard, and also crowding hard. The latter condition is however already being eliminated as extensive alterations and improvements are being made in the building by which nearly double the space will be gained. Buildings in the rear are being torn down to make way for a new projection room; the present one will be turned into the advertising accessory quarters.

C. U. Martin, formerly assistant manager, is now city salesman; a new assistant will be appointed in the near future.

J. G. Meyers of the Grand theatre, Williamsport, and the Lyceum of Newberry, Pa., made Pathe his headquarters on a visit to Philadelphia last week.

The "Shielding Shadow" is making a new record on series. Especially is it appealing to the vaudeville houses which are booking it "fast and furious."

Up to date the following large vaudeville houses have taken each release of the whole series for the time specified. In Philadelphia, Nixon's Grand one week; Nixon's Colonial one week; Keith's Alleghany three days; Keith's Bijou three days. In New Jersey, the Towers in Camden three days; the State Street in Trenton three days.

A. G. Steen, manager of the Unicorn, finds his program increasingly popular in this territory since the new two-reel comedies are ready and the three and five-reelers have been added to the service.

Unicorn has over ninety yearly contracts in the territory and the century mark bids fair to be passed in a short time.

The first two-reel comedy featuring Billy West will be released on November 9. Private exhibitors of this new feature will be given simultaneously in Philadelphia, Wilkes-Barre, Harrisburg, Baltimore, Washington and Charlotte, N. C., so that exhibitors need not buy a "pig in a poke," but can look before they book, for which purpose a number of copies of the film have been secured by Mr. Steen.

Triangle's "Manhattan Madness," with Douglas Fairbanks, is almost causing a Quaker City madness, so eagerly are the fans rushing to see the popular "Doug."

After a whole week at the Arcadia, the Victoria not far away has booked the picture for a week, an unusual proceeding for the latter.

"The Devil's Needle," after traveling the hard and thorny road of censorial condemnation for many days, was finally passed after many appeals plus eliminations were made to suit the Board's requirements.

The scarcity of labor has retarded the opening of Artcraft Pictures Corporation's new exchange a bit, but everything will be in readiness by October 20, in ample time for the first Mary Pickford release. Manager Cunningham is already being swamped with inquiries and requests about the new pictures.

"Yes, busier than ever," said J. S. Hebrew in answer to inquiries, "because we are getting an even larger volume of business on Greater Vitagraph than when we had three others; it is concentrated now."

Sothern in the "Chattel" is scoring a big hit in Pennsylvania. The picture ran a whole week at the Arcadia and is booked for the next whole week at the Palace, both first class downtown houses, only four blocks apart.

At the Strand in Scranton, Pa., the "Chattel" played to 8,000 admissions the first day.

The "Scarlet Runner" will have its first showing at the Princess on Market street October 17.

This series is already a big hit with exhibitors and after the serial begins running in the North American on Sunday the fifteenth, its popularity is bound to increase in greater ratio.

WOODY CALLS MEETING OF MUTUAL COMRADES

J. S. Woody, supervising manager of the Northwest for the Mutual, called a meeting of the Mutual Comrades at Seattle last week. Among those present were G. A. Reed, manager of the Portland branch; R. Madden, Spokane branch manager; R. R. Nave, assistant manager, Seattle, and O. F. Woody, salesman out of Seattle.

Ray Crombacher has been appointed manager of the Triangle Seattle office, succeeding H. G. Rosebaum.

Mr. Rosebaum has accepted the management of the Seattle office of the Artcraft Film Corporation, notwithstanding the report that he would continue with Triangle.

R. E. Fauser of the Dominion Exclusives, Ltd., who handles Fox features in Vancouver, B. C., was in Seattle last Saturday.

ARTCRAFT OPENS DALLAS OFFICE UNDER ROTCHFORD

The Artcraft Pictures Corporation, the Mary Pickford releasing organization, has opened an office in Dallas at 1919 Main street, the location of the old Peerless Feature Film Company. John J. Rotchford, formerly with the New York offices of the Mutual, is in charge. A number of exhibitors and exchange men met Mr. Rotchford on previous visits to the Southwest, and he "starts off" with a rather large acquaintance.

CLEVELAND SCREEN CLUB HOLDS DANCE

The Cleveland Screen Club's biggest social event, a midnight supper, dansant and cabaret performance was held last week in the Hotel Olmstead banquet hall. Among the notables present were Earle Metcalfe, screen star; Dr. Harry A. Lawton of Warren; Howard Thurston, magician, playing at the Prospect; Harry Reavey, who sells "Gloria's Romance," and other things that Kleine, Edison, Selig and Essanay have for sale; Paul C. Mooney, representative for William Fox; Al Brant, owner of "Where Are My Children?" Eleanor Black, one time leading lady for Caruso; A. C. Langan, her husband, personal representatives of Thomas H. Ince; as well as representatives of every motion picture and legitimate theatre in Cleveland, every film exchange and every theatrical company in the city last week. Tables were set for 160. After supper the room was cleared and dancing followed.

UNIVERSAL IN KANSAS CITY SETS OFF TERRITORY IN DISTRICTS

The Kansas City exchange of the Universal Film and Supply Company has set off in districts its territory in the states of Kansas and Missouri. C. A. Jones will have charge of the southern Kansas territory. J. Erwin Dodson will have charge of the western half of Missouri. The third district has not yet been alloted to any salesman.

The new plan will place the salesmen in closer touch with their exhibitors, as each one is required to live in the heart of his territory. The salesmen will thus be able to accomplish better results and give better service to the picture operators and exhibitors.

WATSON BACK AT PITTSBURGH PARAMOUNT OFFICE

Paramount exhibitors are expressing their appreciation at seeing W. C. Watson back in the assistant manager's chair at the Pittsburgh Paramount exchange. Mr. Watson was in Cleveland for a time and made many friends there, who were sorry to see him transferred to Pittsburgh.

Mr. Watson's office is a regular Mecca for film men. Recently a number of prominent film men of this section, the president of a large film producing company, and two Paramount officials were discussing the trend of events with Mr. Watson in the office of the latter.

TOM NORTH RESIGNS AS SEATTLE MANAGER OF V-L-S-E

Tom North has resigned as northwest manager of the Greater Vitagraph Exchange. G. A. Faris, formerly assistant manager of the V-L-S-E, Los Angeles office, has taken charge of the Seattle office.

REPORT ON VEILED PHOPHET WEEK REVEALS OPEN SEASON FOR GOOD BUSINESS IN ST. LOUIS

August Froebel, of Universal, is now in St. Louis with "The Dumb Girl of Portici," which he is handling from the Universal Exchange at 2116 Locust street, and he has already entered into negotiations to place the film in one of the leading theatres in the city for an indefinite run. Mr. Froebel was formerly connected with the St. Louis Motion Picture Company when that organization was making pictures at 25th and Montgomery streets, but he withdrew from the firm when the company moved their studio to California.

S. W. Hatch, manager of the St. Louis branch of the V-L-S-E exchange, received a call from Joseph Partridge, special representative of the V-L-S-E. Mr. Partridge found business booming, and it was not due entirely to Veiled Prophet week, either, because he was in town before the Fall festivities began.

Film Row on Olive street, and the other film exchanges in St. Louis, received an unusual number of callers among their out-of-town customers during Veiled Prophet week. The first week in October is always a busy one in St. Louis, and many people go to town for the fall celebration. The opportunity to combine business with pleasure was not lost sight of by the many exhibitors who spent a few days in the city. Many bookings for the Fall and Winter season were made, many contracts were signed, and the exchanges did a thriving business early and late.

BAUM WITH SELZNICK IN PHILADELPHIA

Louis Baum, formerly manager of the Cincinnati branch of the World Film Corporation and more recently manager of the Bluebirds photoplays in Indianapolis, has been appointed Philadelphia manager of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation at 1339 Vine street, and will at once start on his new duties. General Manager Ben S. Cohen, who has been temporarily handling this exchange, will return to New York.

"The Common Law" passed the censor board with but few changes, which were cheerfully made by Mr. Cohen, who considered their attitude very fair. The picture had a private showing before the Exhibitors' League at the Family theatre, Juniper and Market streets, October 1, and was received with much enthusiasm.

K-E-S-E MOVES DETROIT OFFICE; ARTCRAFT OPENS

Louis Nathan, manager of Detroit exchange of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay companies has moved his headquarters to 712-713 Peter Smith building. Plans now under way call for a complete exchange at this new address; at all times this exchange will keep on hand the film, advertising matter, posters, etc., so that exhibitors are certain to get the very best service at all times due to direct shipments. Heretofore Edison-Selig and Essanay film was shipped to Michigan exhibitors from Cleveland.

Frank Marshall, formerly with Metro and the American Film Co., has associated himself with Mr. Nathan as special representative.

Lust Buys Rights to "Purity" and Purchases the New Film Exchange in Atlanta, Placing Garner in Charge— Seligman Also Joins Exchangemen

THE New Film and Famous Players exchange, Washington, D. C., of which Sydney B. Lust is manager, is very busy these days. Mr. Lust has just bought the states right for the seven-reel production of "Purity," featuring Audry Munson, which Tom Moore has secured the initial public appearance of at the Strand for at least a week, beginning October 1.

This production was given a private showing before critics, the press and exhibitors, and the consensus of opinion was that it ranks among the first most beautiful and artistic films being offered to the public. The fact that the author is Clifford Howard, a Washington man, lends a local charm and interest to the photoplay. Mr. Lust has secured two prints of "Purity" to satisfy the close booking of this film in his territory. The Picture Garden of Baltimore will closely follow the opening of the Strand in Washington, holding the production for three weeks.

Mr. Lust recently purchased the New Film office at Atlanta, Ga., placing Leo G. Garner, formerly associated with Mr. Lust in Washington, in charge of that territory. "I have increased my territory to this extent," remarked Mr. Lust, "so that in states right propositions I will be able to secure two prints and have both the Washington and Atlanta outlets for distribution. This is much more satisfactory to those selling or handling big productions.

Bennie Seligman, formerly of the Paramount exchange in Washington and at one time located in the film business in Philadelphia, has joined the forces of the New Film and Famous Players exchange as assistant and booker for Mr. Lust. Another addition to this office is Leon Rubinstein, formerly of the Ruby Film Company.

Mr. Lust has also secured the Ella Wheeler Wilcox series for that territory. In this connection The Washington Times will conduct a "most popular girl" contest, the winner to be given the opportunity of starring in the photoplay. This promises to be very interesting, with popularity votes running high.

"In addition to these big productions, I will acquire others," stated Mr. Lust, "because I believe the dawn of the open market for the exhibitor is at hand. It may be upon the industry by the opening of the new year. The time is ripe for long films, but films with an absorbing story and excellent in every detail—photography, history, lights, settings and acting. It is not the name of the famous star, despite her artistic work, that will count in the near future; but the combined artistic work of the entire cast. An excellent star with mediocre support will just as surely be a losing proposition to the exhibitor as the same sort of casting has lost out on the dramatic and operatic stage in the past. A photoplay is a unit, and everything in it must lend to its excellence if it would be a lasting success."

Goldstone Resigns from World in Omaha and Organizes Federal; Harry Heyman Succeeds Him as Manager

TWO exchange managers in Omaha, have resigned, their successors have been named, and a new film company incorporated in Omaha within the last week.

Ph. Goldstone, the manager of the World exchange, resigned to join forces with Jake Schlank, formerly manager of the Hipp and a widely known Omaha exhibtor, in organizing the Federal Feature Film Company of Kansas City. The company is distributing states right features. The company has incorporated in Omaha, for $50,000 to do a general exchange business in the making, releasing and the sale of motion picture films. Goldstone has for years been the manager of the World exchange, making it into one of the most important distributing centers in the Omaha territory.

Harry Heyman, one of the best roadmen in the service of the World corporation, and the biggest business getter for the Omaha exchange, was appointed Goldstone's successor, taking office the afternoon that Goldstone left for Kansas City. Fred Salinger has succeeded Heyman as road representative.

Max Weisfeldt, who went to Omaha to manage the Mutual exchange nearly a year ago, had served in the Minneapolis offices and knew his business. After his service there, during which the business enjoyed a steady growth, he accepted a position as assistant manager under B. N. Udell in the Chicago office. Weisfeldt was a live wire exchange manager, inspiring the same progressive spirit among the exhibitors with whom he came in contact. He, like Goldstone, was an enthusiastic booster for Motion Picture News, because it made his exhibitors more progressive, and in that manner advanced business.

C. A. Getzler has arrived in Chicago, where he was the manager of the H. and H. branch of the Mutual, and has taken over the management of the Mutual branch there. Mr. Getzler is confident he will like it in the Middle West.

C. R. Seelye, business manager of all the Pathe exchanges, was in Omaha last week, preaching his sermon of "Fewer Theatres, Better Theatres, Better Pictures." Business throughout the middle west is booking, he declared.

Every exchange in Omaha was visited by scores of exhibitors from out in the state, who went to the city to attend the Ak-Sar-Ben festivities, and to see President Wilson. Special dinners, special shows, automobile rides and other entertainments were given them.

BALSLY OFF ON TRIP

L. D. Balsly, advertising agent for the Kansas City Feature Film Company, has gone to Breckenridge, Mo., on a business trip.

INTERNATIONAL FILM WILL OPEN SIX MORE BRANCHES

The International has received so many requests from exhibitors for International releases that, in order to satisfy this demand, six additional branches will be opened immediately. This action follows the announced policy of expansion by the International. After the new offices are opened, practically the entire United States will be covered.

J. K. Burger, assistant general manager of the International, has arranged for opening branches in the following additional cities: Cleveland and Cincinnati, Ohio; Seattle, Wash., which will cover all of the northwest; Kansas City, Des Moines and Omaha. The International already has branches of the New York headquarters in Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Atlanta, St. Louis, Los Angeles and San Francisco. In addition it has agencies in Buffalo, Albany, New Orleans, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Detroit and Salt Lake City.

The opening of two offices in Ohio and the Northwest by the International is of particular importance and means that the concern is to make a determined fight for business in these districts.

BOSTON MEN PROVE THEMSELVES MIGHTY NIMRODS

Frank Vine, manager of the International Film Service Inc., Boston, and Manager Campbell of the Fox have returned from their big game hunt in Canada. With Dr. Charles F. Barry, physician to many of the film men in Boston, and J. A. Davis, a real estate dealer in Montreal, and five guides, they penetrated 210 miles north of Montreal and brought down moose, beaver, bear, duck, etc.

Mr. Campbell got a nice 1,000-pound moose, with 56-inch spread of peculiarly-formed antlers. He got him at 400 yards. Mr. Vine's ventriloqual powers apparently filled the woods with animals the guides never heard of before, or anybody else for that matter. He was very successful in portraying the "spirit of the moose" which visited the camp at midnight.

PEERLESS DOING BIG BUSINESS

The Peerless Film Service, 100 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, is now enjoying the heaviest business in its history, having gradually added to its service until it has a wide range of offerings to be selected from. It has been appointed distributor in northern California for the production, "Is Any Girl Safe?", the rights to which have been taken over in California, Arizona and Nevada by the Turner & Dahnken Circuit. It has also made arrangements to handle the Christie comedies here, the first releases of which will be on hand shortly. Manager E. H. Emmick is making a business trip to the southern part of the state and will have other interesting announcements to make upon his return.

MERIT WILL BOOK TWEEDLEDUM COMEDIES IN NEW YORK

The Merit Film Corporation has concluded negotiations whereby they will become the exclusive distributors in New York State and northern New Jersey of the Tweedledum comedies made by the Eagle Film Manufacturing & Producing Company of Jacksonville, Fla., which featured Ferdinand Perez.

These pictures will be booked from the New York and Buffalo offices of the Merit Film Corporation, commencing with October 2, the first release to be "Torpedoed by Cupid" in one reel, which will be followed by a two reeler on the succeeding Monday, entitled "Scrambled Honeymoon." "Some Hero," a one reeler; "Tweedledum's Busy Night," a two reeler, and "Lucky Tramp," a one reeler, will follow. This will comprise the releasing program of these comedies for the month of October.

Picture Business Booming Throughout Canada Report of L. T. Rogers, Canadian Manager for William Fox

L. T. ROGERS, Canadian manager for the Fox Film corporation, has returned to New York after a tour of the Fox exchanges in his territory and reports business as being at a high mark, both in regard to the exhibiting and the exchange features, and Mr. Rogers also reported great business for his own company.

When interviewed he said: "The Montreal branch of the Fox Film Corporation is serving twenty-eight theatres out of the forty in that city, which use feature programs. In Toronto the exhibitors told me that the picture business was never so profitable as it is to-day. Practically all their films comes from the United States.

"In St. John, N. B., it was the same story. Our office there, which covers the entire territory of the maritime provinces, supplies film to twenty-four feature theatres out of a possible fifty-two, notwithstanding the fact that there are twelve rival exchanges covering that territory.

"The business I transacted on the trip, included the establishment of a Fox exchange in Winnipeg, Manitoba, at 115 Phoenix Block, which is managed by the Dominion Exclusives, Limited. The office at Vancouver, B. C., is also under the management of this concern. R. A. Scott is our general representative for western Canada, and these exchanges are in his territory."

Mr. Rogers reports promising and profitable business among the larger houses of Canada. "The Colonial Theatre at Vancouver," he said, "is running features for an entire week for the first time in the history of the motion picture business in western Canada."

Harmony and Co-operation the Keynote of Exhibitors and Exchangemen of San Francisco

PLANS are being considered by the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco, which includes practically every film exchange in that city in its membership, for a closer understanding with exhibitors in this territory. When the organization was formed a couple of years ago exhibitors were apprehensive that measures were to be placed into effect that would be detrimental to their interests and vigorously opposed the pay-in-advance plan that was inaugurated to supersede the former system of paying for film rentals. This plan succeeded, despite their opposition, and there are now but few who do not acknowledge that it has benefited both branches of the industry.

In the recent fight on censorship, which has resulted in a victory for film interests, the Board of Trade took such an active part that it has won the confidence and the co-operation of exhibitors. It is now proposed that changes be made in the by-laws of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco and that exhibitors be admitted as associate members in order that their advice might be forthcoming on questions vitally affecting both branches of the industry. It is not intended that exhibitors would take part in all deliberations of the Board, but that they be allowed to co-operate in such matters as censorship, the carriage of films on trains and boats and other matters of similar import. The proposition has not reached a concrete form, as yet, but it is significant to note that it is receiving the serious attention of the Board.

SAX TAKES OVER BLUEBIRD EXCHANGE IN INDIANAPOLIS

On October 5 the management of the Indianapolis, Ind., office of the Bluebird Photoplay company was taken over by Samuel Sax, formerly traveling representative of the company. Mr. Sax through his daily contact with exhibitors has brought with him to his new position an extensive knowledge of the necessities and co-operative needs of theatre managers and his efforts are concentrated along the standards of efficiency and courtesy in these lines.

MIDLAND FILM COMPANY MOVES OFFICES

Owing to its increased activities, the Midland Film Company, of Cleveland, has removed its offices from the Leader-News Building to No. 701-706 Park Building with H. P. Angel, secretary of the company, in charge.

Preparatory to taking any pictures, they are expending all their energies for the improvement and betterment of their property, Midland City, which was formerly known as White's Two-Minute Farm. The Cleveland-Southwestern and Columbus Railway Company, has agreed to co-operate with the Midland Film Company as far as giving adequate service to Midland City.

"ROMEO AND JULIET," METRO, GOES BIG IN IOWA, SAYS SMITH

"Romeo and Juliet," the new Metro production, is meeting with great success in Iowa, according to C. E. Smith, Des Moines manager of that firm. Mr. Smith recently announced that this picture had drawn the highest flat rate of any picture ever shown in Des Moines when he signed up to have it shown at the Palace here. Another large theatre in Iowa to get this is the Garden at Davenport, managed by A. H. Blank.

ABRAMS HAS NEW BOOKING SYSTEM

Manager Curly Calvin of the Bluebird exchange, Omaha, is raving now-a-days over a new booking system installed by Jerome Abrams, chief field man for the Bluebird, who was here recently. The system was originated by Mrs. Abrams, a recent bride, while she worked in the exchange of her father at Oklahoma City. Her husband has installed the system in ten exchanges and plans to make it universal. It is a three-book-check with some new advantages.

The first book carries the name of the feature on a loose leaf, with the days of the month running down the center of the page. On the line with each day is written the town where the feature is booked.

The second book carries the name of the theatre, with the days of the month running down the center of the page. Each theatre, or account as it is called, is numbered. On the line with the date is the name of the feature the theatre on that page has booked.

The booking chart carries the name of the theatre and the name of the play, one along the top and the other down the side, with squares in which are written the account number and the date.

The system prevents repeating, or giving a man two features on the same date; it prevents booking two accounts for the same feature on the same day; it plainly sets forth the time to advance the paper for the feature; it shows the amount of time between each booking, and the place of booking, giving an opportunity to estimate the time it takes to go from one place to another; and it gives a check on the film as it goes and comes.

GILMORE OPENS EXCHANGE IN QUAKER CITY

C. V. Garrick, district manager of the Interstate Films Company, which handles all Universal releases in Philadelphia, has just returned from Chicago, where a meeting of the Universal district managers was held. Mr. Garrick reports big plans on foot, which he is sure will build up business all through the Universal territories.

The Animated Cartoon Exchange, of which W. G. Gilmore is manager, has recently opened a Philadelphia home at 1339 Vine street. Mr. Gilmore has eighteen years in the film business to his credit, having started as office boy with P. L. Waters, at 41 East Twenty-first street, New York, when pictures were considered a joke. Later Mr. Gilmore was with the General Film Company, rising steadily until he became manager of the important Twenty-third street branch.

SOL LESSER MAKES TRIP TO LOS ANGELES

Sol L. Lesser, head of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., and the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., recently paid a brief visit to the branch maintained at Los Angeles, which is in charge of his brother, Irving Lesser, formerly of the San Francisco headquarters.

He has sent his assistant, Miss F. Rubenstein, on a tour of the United States to assist in placing "The Ne'er-Do-Well," and it will be several weeks before she returns to the home office.

"TELL THE TRUTH ONLY" IS DETROIT SLOGAN

"Tell the truth only" is the slogan of the exchanges of Detroit, according to their last luncheon and meeting, at which all the exchange managers in the city were present, including their force of traveling salesmen. Some of the road men have been causing no end of unrest by making statements without backing, and passing on rumors that they heard that were entirely without foundation.

"We don't want our men to tell exhibitors anything except what is absolutely the truth," said President Trask in addressing the salesmen. "We can't afford to antagonize the exhibitors by having our salesmen get business under false pretenses and through false statements, or by knocking the other exchanges. There is enough business for all of us and there is absolutely no need of unfair competition.

"The exchange managers don't want this sort of thing, neither do they sanction it. So don't tell exhibitors things that you hear or make statements about something which is not official. Keep away from rumors. Just tend to your own business; do the things that you are paid to do and we will have a lot less trouble."

BRYAN VISITS NASHVILLE; REPORTS BIG BUSINESS

Frank P. ("Going Some") Bryan, special traveling representative of Vitagraph (V-L-S-E), Atlanta, Ga., was in Nashville on October 6, and during his stay was the guest of General Manager Carson Bradford of the Strand theatre. When seen by a representative of Motion Picture News, Mr. Bryan had the following to say: "Business out of the V-L-S-E office in Atlanta is the largest on record. Contracts are coming in from every portion of the state touched by the V-L-S-E office of Atlanta from exhibitors throughout the territory who are now affixing their signatures to a Vitagraph contract which stands for 'Excellence' as far as service is concerned."

VISITORS TO KANSAS CITY EXCHANGES

Among the visitors to the Kansas City exchanges last week were: A. J. Johnson, Johnson theatre, Aurora, Mo.; Fred Savage, owner of the De Luxe and Rex theatres in Hutchinson, Kan., and the two Gilbreath Brothers, owners of the Queen theatre, Lucas, Kan., who are on a pleasure trip to Memphis, Tenn., in their motor car.

NEW EXCHANGE BUILDING FOR SAN FRANCISCO

Nat A. Magner, of San Francisco, head of the company bearing his name, is back from an extended business trip to New York, on which he made arrangements for securing several notable productions. He has been busy ever since his return on plans for a building to be erected in the film exchange district, one floor of which will be occupied by his exchange.

DENHAM PALMER RESIGNS AS EXCHANGE MANAGER

When Denham Palmer, who has resigned his position as manager of the Denver Exchange of one of the large distributing corporations to become salesman for Vitagraph V-L-S-E in the Denver territory was asked for particulars as to why he had decided to step down and relinquish the title and remuneration that goes with the position of a branch manager, he said: "The future of the Vitagraph organization as well as the record of its past progressiveness inspired my decision to accept a salesman's berth with Greater Vitagraph's releasing organization.

"I know that what I have done is absolutely contrary to the views held by many men in the field. Their action I attribute to false pride as against sensible self-interest.

"In my particular case I believe that I can say without egotism that there are not any film salesmen who know the Denver territory better than I do and I soon expect to exceed under the Greater Vitagraph's liberal profit sharing policy, my former salary as Denver branch manager of a rival concern."

PATHE IN SAN FRANCISCO EXCHANGE TO MOVE

The Pathe Exchange at San Francisco has completed arrangements to move to a central location on Market street and is awaiting the approval of the home office before making the change. Manager Lotz, who recently arrived to take charge of the branch, is highly pleased with the business that is being done and is especially delighted with having placed "The Shielding Shadow" with the Market Street Theatre. this having been the first serial ever booked for that house. He promises something out of the ordinary in the facilities and appointments of the new exchange, which he hopes will soon be ready for occupancy.

OHIO RIGHTS FOR INCE PICTURE SOLD

"War's Women," Thomas H. Ince's smashing screen success, is to be brought into Ohio by the States Film Company, Inc., 724 Columbia Building, an Ohio corporation in association with Mr. Ince himself. "War's Women," was written by Mr. Ince and J. G. Hawks, and the former directed and produced it. It co-stars Frank Keenan and Enid Markey. In the supporting cast is Elenor Black, screen leading woman for Caruso. Its original title was "The Despoilers," which is descriptive of its theme—the mistreatment of women in war.

ENGELMAN NOW MANAGER OF INDIANAPOLIS MUTUAL

W. H. Engleman, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation's Evansville office, has been promoted to managership of the Indianapolis office of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Engleman succeeds M. N. Miller, who has been manager of the Indianapolis office for about two years. Mr. Miller resigned to take charge of "Purity" in Indiana. N. M. Dixon, who has been traveling in southern Indiana and Kentucky, has been promoted to the managership of the Evansville office.

Film News From Foreign Parts

Australian Urges Production of "Home Films"

Special to Motion Picture News.

Sept. 13, Sydney, New South Wales

ONE of the most notable events in the history of the motion picture business in this city was the opening of the new Boomerang Theatre at Coogee, N. S. W. on Tuesday, 7th inst. Not only is the Boomerang one of the largest suburban theatres in Australia, but it is the first and only picture that changes its program every evening. The change is not being put into operation by securing cheap pictures as is evidenced by the first week's program, viz.,—Tennessee's Pardner, "Birth of A Nation" (one night only) "Children in the House," "The Secret Sin," "The Comeback" and "A Woman's Resurrection." The Boomerang (which implies that "You'll come back again") is owned by H. J. Clayton, and C. T. Knibbs, has been engaged to lead the orchestra. Mr. Knibbs was for years in George Marlow's theatrical company.

The long awaited local production, "The Mutiny of the Bounty," arrived and was screened for one week at the new theatre, Hoyt's. Announced as purely a historical film it was rather a surprise to find that Director Raymond Longford had worked a love story into the picture. The story of the picture is founded on facts culled from the log of Captain Bligh, which is now in the Mitchell Library, Sydney. Bligh was sent out to secure plants, etc., from the islands of the Pacific Ocean in the year 1772, and on board the Bounty he took with him a crew of forty-six. Arriving at one of the islands Bligh's crew became infatuated with the native girls and refused to leave with the captain. He succeeded in getting them out to sea but they mutinied and dispatched him with seventeen men in an open boat, then returned to the island. Bligh succeeded in reaching Timor after a long and trying voyage, while Christian, leader of the mutineers established a settlement on Pitcairn Island. Bligh reached England later and a ship was sent after the mutineers, the leaders of whom were executed.

Into this story Longford has worked a slight romance among the native girls which although bordering on melodrama is acceptable, inasmuch as it serves to add interest to the historical scenes. The camera work is fine and the tinting of some of the scenes although a little overdone, makes the picture highly acceptable.

George Cross, who plays Captain Bligh, is one of our best actors, slightly Farnum-like in appearance. His performance as Bligh is one of the best characterizations the screen has seen. With the exception of Charles Villiers, D. A. Dalziel, and Wilton Power, the majority of the cast are too camera-conscious, particularly the Maori girls.

Cricks and Jones are handling this five reeler.

Australasian Films Limited, who are the leading film buyers of this country and stated to be the largest purchasers of motion pictures in the entire world, are reported to have exported £250,000 worth of film during the last financial year, approximately ten million feet. This firm now controls 44 theatres in the principal cities of Australia, giving employment to 1250 persons.

"Me and Me Moke"

"Me and Me Moke," a recent London film screen here, is reminiscent of "My Old Dutch," and contains some of the best subtitles seen for some time. One which particularly appealed is when the young artist who had come down in the world is escorted to the home of a coster. The latter's wife exclaims—"An nartist iz he? Well, we'll get 'im to put a coat of paint on ower barrer. Just plain red and yaller'll do; nuthin 'laborate."

The Australian Photoplay Magazine scored an unqualified success when it secured the services of T. H. Eslick to write a series of articles on "Showmanship." Eslick is perhaps the livest advertising expert that this country has yet seen. Arriving here a few years ago to organize what is now known as the "White City," Eslick had supervised some great projects. He was director-general of the Indian Durbar Exhibition, designer and constructor to G. A. Lawsha, London; designer and constructor of amusements at London, Yarmouth, Liverpool, Venedig-in-Wein, and Luna Park, Vienna; Brussels Exhibition, Luna Park, Paris, Luna Park, Cairo—Cologne and Berlin—St. Petersburg, Moscow; Coney Island, U. S. A., Luna Park, Melbourne, and White City and the Palladium, Sydney.

At present in charge of the Palladium, Sydney, he intends reopening the Sydney White City at an early date, besides constructing a similar resort in another Australian City.

He has gained country-wide publicity through his entirely original and successful publicity stunts.

Mr. Eslick's popularity is only too apparent when it is learned that he has been selected as Liberal candidate for the electorate of Paddington, Sydney.

C. Post Mason's four reeler "Greater New York," recently concluded a successful season at the Crystal Palace, Sydney. These series of pictures are admittedly the finest of the kind screened here to date.

Bob Dexter, the publicity agent for Amalgamated Pictures Limited, Melbourne, Victoria, and late of the Sydney department is engaged to be married to Lydia Henry, a young Melbourne lady. Bob was reported to be very discontented with his Melbourne position some time ago, but recently there has been no complaints.

A suit was recently brought by the Elite Pictures Limited against the Co-Operative Film Exchange (importers of World Films and Metro Pictures) to restrain the Co-Operative Exchange from supplying to Hoyt's pictures or otherwise permitting the exhibition at such theatre of any Metro features, a week before they were rented to the Elite Pictures. The case was settled out of court.

Revivals of Popular Subjects

Revivals of past successes are prevalent among the leading city theatres at present. Recently Frederic Shipman presented "Neptune's Daughter," at the Lyceum and "Tess of the Storm Country" is due here next week for a short return season. Chaplin revivals are many.

Lieut. Jim Anderson and Carey Wilson of the Fox Film Corporation recently arrived back from New Zealand where they had been engaged for some time in putting the Fox productions on the market in that country. The two left Sydney on Aug. 11, and returned on the 4th instant. Mr. Anderson announces that the trade showing of Fox Films in New Zealand was as great a success as the one given prior to the introduction of these pictures in Sydney. Nearly every prominent member of the film industry were represented, including the representatives of the Wellington newspapers. Offices for the Dominion are located at 65 Willis Street, Wellington, and W. Wadman has charge with the assistance of D'Arcy Read. The placing of the New Zealand branch raises the number of Fox offices to 61; viz. 42 in U. S. A., 9 in the British Isles, South America 3, Canada 4 and Australasia 3.

The "Lieut. and Mr. Wilson," both had much to say of the great time they had in the island country.

Messrs. Crick and Jones of Sydney are another comparatively new firm in this city which are extending their business to New Zealand, and recently Fred Hughes was sent to the Dominion to look after their interests there. Two new features are due to be released by this firm, "Tom Brown's Schooldays," and "Trapped by the London Sharks," both British subjects.

"The Life of Adam Lindsay Gordon" is the title of a picture produced in Melbourne, Victoria, by W. J. Lincoln, and Hugh McRae portrays the role of Adam Lindsay Gordon, Australia's poet.

A rather interesting letter was received by the conductor of a motion picture department in the Melbourne Herald recently. Some time ago he conducted a contest for the most popular actress and the photographs of Mary Pickford and Marguerite Clark were published as rivals. A few days ago a copy of the paper was returned together with a letter with a few words scrawled across it stating that the writer was in a trench in Flanders and he would "Give a quid to see either of them now." (A quid is slang for the Australian pound note.)

Albert E. Rowe, formerly with Fred Baugh of London, and more recently with the Monograph Poster Company of this city, is strong in his argument for local production. He states that the trouble appears to be that there is no market for the subjects once they are produced, but he also adds that "Local producers seem to think that unless they sell their films in America there is no market. Before the war the English market was flooded with American productions, bnt now the British are waking up to the fact that the rush of American films is no good and the heavy duty on imported productions from that country is serving to make the buyers seek elsewhere. This then gives the Australian producer just the chance he is waiting for. I can see no reason why an outback story of the Australian bush should not be just as big a winner as the American cowboy tale.

Pathe Cameraman Is "On His Own"

Franklyn Barrett at one time with the Pathe Film Company, and more recently photographer for the George Willoughby Photoplays has launched out on his own and is now busy producing two one reel comedies at his little 45 x 70 outdoor stage at Parramatta, N. S. W.

Frank Hurley, the Australian photographer who went south with the Shackleton Antarctic Expedition, is reported to be among those who recently arrived safely in a South American port.

Jack Gavin's local production of "The Revue Girls" with Gwen Lewis, was given its premiere recently. It is believed that this two reeler will eventually be presented to the general public in conjunction with a musical revue now being rehearsed.

Higgins Brothers secured some fine fight pictures of the D'Arcy-Clabby middleweight championship of Australia which was won by D'Arcy. The picture is in seven reels and is one of the longest fight pictures ever photographed here.

Guy Hastings, a prominent stage artist and recently a motion picture star in "A Hero of the Dardanelles," has enlisted as a private in the Australian Imperial Expeditionary Forces.

Australasian Films Limited are reported to have secured the Australasian rights for George Kleine's serial-novel "Gloria's Romance" with Billie Burke. Miss Burke, although she has never been in this country, has earned country-wide popularity and judged on the success of "Peggy," this serial should create a record.

Another serial that is due to make its appearance within the next few weeks is the Universal Company's "Terence O'Rourke" series which features J. Warren Kerrigan. Fraser Films Limited have secured the rights to this serial for their territory.

Louise Lovely, the Australian actress, who was more familiarly known here as Louise Carbasse, recently made her screen debut in "The Grip of Jealousy," and again appeared later in "Tangled Hearts."

Many of her old-time admirers visited the Haymarket Theatre to see her on the films.

Hoyt's limited have secured exclusive first run rights to the Fox films for this city. When the "Mutiny of the Bounty" was screened at their theatre last week, a benefit performance was given to the school children and 2,000 youngsters attended with the result that it was necessary to put extra police in charge to reorganize the delayed traffic.

Jeffkins Turns Author

Rupert Jeffkins, the intrepid motorist and aviator, who claims to be the first "Advertising film producer" in Los Angeles, is at present in Sydney, and will write a series of articles for The Australian Photoplay Magazine.

Rudolph Unholz, who died recently in America and to whose wife the Keystone Company gave a benefit, was well-known in Australia as a prize-fighter.

While filming the opening of the only Aviation School in Australia at Richmond, N. S. W., recently Cameraman Lacey Percival of Australasian Film Gazette had a narrow escape from being killed through the aeroplane not rising off the ground in the space allowed by the photographer. Fortunately he escaped serious injury to himself.

A new theatre is to be erected in Sydney shortly by the Fraser Film Company, on the scene of a recent fire. It is said that it will be one of the costliest buildings wholly devoted to pictures that has yet been designed for a local theatre.

The Western Australian State Commandant recently viewed the screening of the Vitagraph product on "The Battlecry of Peace" and expressed his admiration at the fine portrayals given by the members of the cast, and also commented on the skilful direction that enabled the taking of such fine scenes.

William Jolliffe, formerly Chief of the Crown Law Department in Wellington, New Zealand, has been appointed chief censor for that State and will view each picture prior to its public screening.

Mr. Kelly, in the House of Representatives, Melbourne, Victoria, recently received an answer in regard to his question regarding film censorship. The Minister for Customs, on behalf of the Minister of the Navy stated that "Military censorship of films had recently been assumed by the department, and was necessarily carried out in each state capital. Censors had now been instructed that when the least doubt existed as to whether films should be passed or not the films in question should be sent to Melbourne for reference to the deputy chief censor. There was thus one picture 'The Cheat,' which was passed by the censor in Sydney and subsequently prohibited by the deputy chief censor.

"The probability of German influence being organized to produce films affecting the solidarity of the Allies and to be prejudicial to recruiting had been considered, and the necessary steps had been taken to prevent the exhibition of such films. He understood that the manager of an Australian film agency did bear a German name, but any pictures that were imported by this firm were scrutinized closely. The firm had come to an arrangement to submit all pictures that might be in any way connected with the war before exhibition. The arrangement now in force was that only films which were undoubtedly harmless should be passed by the censor in the respective states.

All others bearing on the war that might be considered harmful must be passed by the deputy chief censor.

"Hoot" Gibson, who is at present appearing in features with Harry Carey for the Universal Film Mfg. Co., was a prominent member of Bud Atkinson's Circus which toured Australia about 1910.

The main pictures shown recently were "The Ayran," "Captive God," "Flirting with Fate," (Triangle) "La Boheme," "Perils of Divorce," (World) "Golden Chance," "Foundling," "Secret Sin," (Paramount) "Wall Between," "Lovely Mary," "Playing with Fire," (Metro) "Ambition," "Regeneration," "A Woman's Honor," (Fox) "Mutiny of the Bounty." Moss Disposes of Nineteen States During the Week

Australian and English Rights Also Sold—"Boots and Saddles" Will Be the November Release—The Feature Is from the Pen of Eugene Walter, the Playwright

DURING the past week B. S. Moss disposed of nineteen states on his initial release, "The Power of Evil." Among the concerns which purchased territory were the Kriterion Film Company of Boston, who bought the New England States; Electric Supply Company of Philadelphia, Southern New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia; Federal Film Corporation, Kansas City, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, and Iowa; and the Independent Film Corporation, Minneapolis, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and North and South Dakota.

The rights for Australia and New Zealand have been taken by the Co-operative Film Exchange, Ltd. The English rights have also been disposed of.

The Loew and Proctor circuit will project "The Power of Evil" on the screens of their respective theatres, and the management of the Stanley theatre has also contracted for the photodrama from the B. S. Moss studios.

"Boots and Saddles" will be the November release of the Moss Motion Picture Corporation. The feature comes to the screen in five parts, Eugene Walter, the noted playwright, is the author of this photodrama, in which the greater majority of the exterior scenes were photographed on the Mexican border.

Mr. Moss has accepted for immediate production, a scenario entitled "One Hour," the sequel to Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks" and "One Day." The cast is practically completed. A prominent female star who has achieved fame both in the spoken and silent drama will portray the principal role in the photoplay.

BLUE BIRD PHOTOPLAYS, (INC) PRESENT-

"THE END OF THE RAINBOW"

A THRILLING DRAMA OF THE BIG TIMBER, AND THE POT OF GOLD AT THE END OF THE RAINBOW.

WITH MYRTLE GONZALEZ, VAL DAUL, GEO HERNANDEZ, & FREDERICK MONTAGUE.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS (INC)

Saturday Evening Post Advertisements appearing every week a huge factor in building that prestige and popularity which all Exhibitors are seeking.

THE fundamental principle of the BLUEBIRD is the good play by the good author. If our stars fit the parts we use the stars; if they do not fit, we do not use them. Some producers use stars whether they fit or not, and the result is a poorly balanced production. You leave the theatre dissatisfied, naturally. You can't always get plays to fit your stars; but you can always choose stars to fit your plays. That's the only sure way to please. And that, in brief is what the term BLUEBIRD stands for. It is insurance of consistent entertainment.

The growing popularity of BLUEBIRDS is evidenced by packed houses wherever they are shown. The BLUEBIRD policy of "The Play's the Thing," is being told in half page advertisements to over ten millions of people every week. You can get your share of this profitable business by showing BLUEBIRD Photoplays in your own theatre.

Exchange Men in Maryland Asked for Extension of Time for Exemption from Censorship Fee

THE following is an answer, in the form of a letter, to the article in MOTION PICTURE NEWS of October 14 reporting a recent meeting of the Washington exchange men and the Maryland Board of Motion Picture Censors:

"The report of the meeting between the Washington Exchange men and the Maryland Board of Censors, as published in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, is calculated to give a false impression of the actual state of affairs to any persons who may read the article; and, in the interest of fair play, we would be glad to have the following statement published:

"The chief object of the visit of the exchange men was not to prevent the payment of the censorship fee on commercial films but to ask for an extension of the time during which these films might be exempt from the censorship fee of two dollars per reel. According to Section 2 of the Act establishing the Maryland Board of Motion Picture Censors, the board was empowered to enforce the law from the time it went into effect, June 1, 1916.

"However, taking advantage of the power granted it under Section 16*, the board determined to defer the time for enforcing the Act as applied to "commercial reels," until January 1, 1917, from a sincere desire to co-operate with the exchange men, and to prevent as much financial loss as possible. This action was taken upon the earnest appeal of the exchange men, and after careful investigation of the action taken by other boards in other states. The board has no right to prevent, or even to indefinitely defer, the complete enforcement of the Act; and the question of revenue, though touched on at the meeting, did not concern the matter at issue.

"Therefore the charge that it is a high handed move on the part of the Maryland censors is absolutely unfounded and misleading to those who are unacquainted with the provisions of the law.

"The statement that during the hearing the fact was brought out that only four subjects had been condemned by the board out of 4000 reels, is most inaccurate. The board has been in existence since June 1, 1916 (four months); the law has been enforced since June 26; 1328 subjects, comprising 2547 reels, have been examined up to the present writing; five subjects have been condemned, and eliminations have been made in 162 subjects.

"Parts of the law bearing on the subject are as follows:

"Section 2—It shall be unlawful to sell, lease, lend, exhibit or use any motion picture film, reel or view in the State of Maryland, unless the said film, reel or view has been submitted by the exchange, owner, or lessee of the film, reel or view, and duly approved by the Maryland State Board of Censors, hereinafter in this act called the Board.

* Sec. 16—This Act shall be enforced by the Board. In carrying out and enforcing this Act, it may adopt such reasonable rules as it may deem necessary. Such rules shall not be inconsistent with the laws of Maryland.

AGE LIMIT REDUCED IN BOSTON

The license of the Majestic theatre, Boston, has been restored by Mayor Curley. The laws allow the mayor to restore a license, but it can only be revoked by a vote of a majority of the census board.

In conformity with his promise to the theatrical interests of the city to reconsider his order barring all children under sixteen years of age from the theatres, Mayor Curley, after a conference with Health Commissioner Mahoney, decided to reduce the age limit of the children who are excluded from the theatres to eight years.

The two officials reached this decision in view of the opening of schools where children will mingle freely and because possibly no public interests will be served by the order, while great damage would be done in theatres during the time the order is in force. The new ruling is now in effect.

Speeding-Up Process to Be Applied in Handling Claims for Indemnity on Account of Loss and Damage

THE speeding-up process is to be applied in the handling of claims for indemnity on account of loss and damage of insured and C. O. D. mail by the Post Office Department. In a circular letter to the postal service, Assistant Postmaster General Dockery states that in many instances postmasters are not giving immediate attention to indemnity claims and to inquiries from the department regarding them.

This has caused delays in the adjustment of claims and, says Mr. Dockery, has subjected the Post Office Department to severe criticism from claimants. He has declared that employees handling claims shall familiarize themselves with existing regulations covering such claims and see to it that all necessary information is called for by the regulations, and any additional data necessary to the proper consideration of the claim, is furnished, and postmasters are told that they are expected to see to it that these orders are complied with in every instance.

It is not necessary to refuse to accept insured or C. O. D. parcel post packages damaged in transit in order to make valid a claim for indemnity, according to a recent statement of Assistant Postmaster General Dockery. Many merchants throughout the country, it was said at the Post Office Department, have been laboring under the impression that, in order to make a claim for indemnity, it is necessary to refuse to receive parcels damaged in transit.

Orders have been issued by the Department to its employes, advising them that they must in all cases of damage explain to the addressees that the acceptance of the parcel will in no wise militate against the validity of any claim they may file, but that, instead, their action in refusing the package will subject the sender to additional expense, in that he will be required to pay again the amount of postage required for its transmission, in order that the parcel may be returned to him for examination and determination of the extent of the damages for which claim will be filed.

According to a ruling of August 8, indemnity is payable for partial as well as total damage to packages mailed after that date. The acceptance of damaged parcels by the addresses, it is stated, will enable claim for damage to be filed earlier than would be the case were the goods to be returned to the sender, thus enabling the Department to make quicker adjustment. Recipients of damaged parcels should remember that if they accept them they should at once communicate with the senders, and, if a claim is filed, have either themselves or the senders designated as the ones to whom indemnity should be paid.

FOX PICTURE PASSES CENSORS WITHOUT CUT

The Fox Film Corporation's "Daughter of the Gods" passed the Pennsylvania Board of Censors without a single cut. This production will be shown in Philadelphia in the near future in some prominent theatre as a special attraction.

Two Exhibitors of Minneapolis at Odds with Organized Labor —Steffes Fails to Restrain Union

TWO court cases regarding the relations of motion picture exhibitors to organized labor are now being watched with keen interest by exhibitors of Minnesota. One case has reached the criminal branch of the state courts, and the other is in the civil branch. Both grew out of methods employed by the unions in picketing theatres, while strikes were in progress.

The first case is the suit brought by Albert Steffes, proprietor of the Northern theatre, Twentieth avenue and Third street, Minneapolis, to restrain the Motion Picture Operators' Union from placing banners in front of the theatre and from employing men to stand in front of the house to tell patrons of the strike that existed. This grew out of the action of Mr. Steffes, who discharged an operator who belonged to the union and employed another, who sought admission to the body. The union refused to admit the second operator on the ground that the discharge of the first had not been accounted for.

After prolonged arguments before Judge Molyneaux, the union was upheld. Later, however, Mr. Steffes brought another charge against the union for $1,000 property damages. This case has not yet been settled.

The second case deals with an indictment returned against Eugene Stanchfield charging conspiracy to compel the settlement of strike difficulties.

Wolfson Brothers purchased a theatre on Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis, from S. H. Kahn, and let a contract to the Sterling Electric Company, a concern employing non-union labor, for the wiring and other electrical work. Stanchfield according to the charge told the proprietors that his theatre would be put on the unfair list unless union labor was employed. Wolfson Brothers said they offered to cancel the contract and employ union labor, but that Stanchfield, acting for the electrical union, told them that all the work put in by non-union labor would have to be torn out. The proprietors refused to allow this to be done and let the work proceed.

When the theatre was opened, according to the proprietors, banners were placed in front of the theatre, and men were employed to parade as they did before the Steffes place. Finally the proprietors called Stanchfield and asked him what they would have to do to settle the trouble and rid the theatre of the picketing. They declared that in addition to the picketing, evil smelling liquids were placed in the theatre and that patrons were driven from the place.

Both the proprietors declared in their preliminary testimony that Stanchfield told them the matter could be settled by the payment of a fine of $200, which could be imposed by the union. This was paid, the proprietors said and immediately the parades stopped and the odors were no longer noticed in the theatre.

Stanchfield said that there was no extortion. He said that the strike was declared in the regular order of things, and that Wolfson Brothers employed him to use his services as an arbitrator. He said he succeeded in getting the strike called off and was paid the $200 for actual service. He holds a contract which he said he and the Wolfsons signed, employing him as a paid arbitrator. The Wolfson's admit signing the contract, but declare the document was merely drawn up to protect Stanchfield in case of a court action.

The trial of the case is set for October 25, and promises to be one of the prominent cases of the calendar inasmuch as the election occurs but a few days later, and the trial is expected to have an effect on the fight between the socialist labor candidate and the opposing nominee for the mayoralty.

FILM PIRATES UNDER SURVEILLANCE OF MUTUAL

A plot of the film pirates to steal a complete set of the motion pictures of "The Secret of the Submarine" has been uncovered by reports reaching the legal department of the Mutual Film Corporation in Chicago from its private detectives in several centers.

A number of reels representing various installments of this novel in films have been stolen from theatres and while enroute to Mutual Film Corporation exchanges.

In a certain eastern city is a plant now under the surveillance of detectives where stolen films are duplicated by a sort of photocounterfeiting process. The prints of the motion pictures thus stolen are utilized for distribution in foreign parts. There they are the least likely to be discovered and there prosecutions are most difficult and copyrights always the least effective.

Special precautions are being taken by the Mutual to safeguard the stocks of prints of "The Secret of the Submarine" now held in the vaults of the corporation's sixty-eight exchanges in America. The picture is fully covered by copyrights as well.

INDIANA THEATRE ORDERED CLOSED BY CHIEF OF POLICE

Chief of Police Harry Adams, of Vincennes, acting on orders issued by Mayor James M. House, ordered the Star theatre, Fourth and Busseron streets, Vincennes, to close its doors recently. Theodore Charles was the manager.

It is understood that several weeks ago the building was condemned by the State Fire Marshal and that Mayor House, in issuing the order, was acting on an order from the State Fire Marshal.

THIRTY DETROIT THEATRES FAIL TO RENEW LICENSE

The Detroit Police Department is investigating the cases of thirty moving picture theatres, whose owners so far have failed to secure a license, although the city ordinance says theatres must renew their licenses the first of every August. Most of the theatres failing in this matter are of the small type, and it is believed that most of them are being offered by their owners.

BOARD OF TRADE IN SAN FRANCISCO TO COMBAT STATE CENSORSHIP

While the censorship of pictures at San Francisco has been done away with, largely due to the untiring efforts of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco, the specter of state censorship is appearing and it is becoming apparent that a fight will have to be made in the State Legislature next year to prevent a law along this line from being placed on the statute books.

At the first of a series of luncheons to be held twice a month by the Board of Trade, which took place on October 5 at the Tait-Zinkand Cafe, this matter was discussed at some length and it was decided that this was one case where preparedness would be highly advisable. It was made known that certain interests were already quietly preparing to introduce a state censorship bill along the lines of the one that was drawn up last year, but which was not introduced on account of pressure from other quarters.

At the many hearings held by the police committee of the board of supervisors on the censorship question before the board of censors was finally abolished, the advocates of censorship repeatedly cited the advantages of a state board and time and time again told how well this plan was working where it had been adopted. These forces will be lined up in favor of a statewide measure, unless they can be made to realize that their efforts will be futile. The Board of Trade will not be caught napping and will be found ready to fight at the first mention of a state board of censorship for moving pictures.

OHIO JUDGE RULES IN FAVOR OF EXHIBITOR

Managers of the Lucier moving picture theatre, 17825 Detroit avenue, Lakewood, Ohio, and members of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes failed to get together and settle their grievances as they were requested to do by Common Pleas Judge Thomas Kennedy.

Judge Kennedy has issued an injunction against the union. The union had declared the management, Burt C., Arthur C. and C. Maheu, unfair to labor because one of the managers had assumed the work of running the film machine. The union was accused of allowing its members to congregate on the sidewalk and of distributing cards implying that the theatre was an unsafe place.

"You can picket men near the theatre to tell the public that the managers are unfair to union labor," the judge ruled, "the fact that the work of running the film machine is done by one of the partners or members of the family shall not be considered as unfair to union labor."

JUDGE SELECTED FOR OPERATORS' TRIAL

Judge W. H. Eichhorn, of Bluffton, judge of the circuit court, has been selected by agreement, to preside in the trial of the moving picture show employes who were arrested at Huntington, Ind., a few weeks ago for operating a picture show on Sunday. The manager of the show has declared his purpose of making a test case of the matter.

Oklahoma Arbitration Board Submits Findings in Strike Case; Outlines Form of Contract

THE state board of arbitration at Oklahoma City, Okla., has made the following finding in the strike situation at Oklahoma City and Tulsa:

"We recommend that the stage employes and local managers enter into a contract embracing the following points: That nothing but union stage employes be employed in the city in theatres controlled by the managers, that the rate of wages be increased $3 per week, in accordance with the demand of the stage employes at the time of the strike, which makes the rate of wages as follows: Master carpenters, $24 per week, property managers, $18 per week, assistant carpenters, $18 per week, the said week's work to consist of seven days.

"We further recommend that the hours of work be so arranged by the managers that it will be unnecessary for stage employes to report before 11 o'clock A.M., that they have proper relief periods for lunch and supper, and that they be not required to work later than 10.30 P.M. As to the proposition of theatre managers using nothing but members of the White Rats union, the board does not feel qualified, at this time, to pass judgment upon this important issue by reason of the fact that Oklahoma City is one of a chain of cities on circuits, which are booked by foreign concerns or booking agents, located outside the State, and we, therefore, doubt the feasibility of imposing upon the managers in Oklahoma City this duty.

"We understand that the managers have in the past operated with a closed shop in so far as the local men are concerned, and that it is possible to carry out such a contract with the White Rats Actors Union, but on account of the conditions before mentioned, we see that the matter is questionable and we believe that if a thorough trial is given it will demonstrate whether or not the plan is feasible.

"We are convinced from the testimony presented before this board, and after a thorough examination of the contracts under which the managers procure the acts, that the contract in universal use in this country is unjust, both to the actor and to the management. We recommend to the State Legislature that it enact such laws as will protect the actors and managers operating in the State of Oklahoma.

"We further find from the evidence presented, the existence of a combination that controls managers and actors throughout the United States and we recommend to the United States Congress that the proper laws be enacted to regulate the booking agents to those employed by, through or under him and his contracts, which we believe will be of mutual benefit to both actor and manager."

The above findings are not binding upon the parties in the strike, but may be of value in court proceedings and influencing legislation.

The strike still continues and the picketing of theatres is being kept up.

San Francisco Exhibitors Abuse Film Carrying Privileges, Bureau of Explosives Reports

IN spite of their promises to comply strictly with the spirit and letter of the agreement made between the railroads and film men last spring, respecting the carrying of moving picture films on ferryboats and suburban trains as hand baggage, there are some California exhibitors who are apparently ignoring the rule, and thereby exposing the entire trade to the danger of having the privileges so generously granted them taken away. When this question was brought up before the Railroad Commission last spring a tentative agreement was reached, after the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco had interceded in behalf of the exhibitors, whereby the railroads would permit films to be carried as hand baggage when encased in metal fiber-lined cases securely locked and bearing a yellow caution label. H. B. Eyde, of the United States Bureau of Explosives, has been keeping a watch for violations of these rules, as have employees of the railroads, and several reports have been filed concerning infractions of them.

In these reports, which have been sent to the railroad offices and to the Film Exchange Board of Trade, the name of the person carrying the film is given, with the name and address of the theatre for which they were intended and the film exchange from which they had been received, together with the date, hour and boat or train. In most of these cases the failure to have the container marked with a yellow caution label constituted the infraction of the rules. Mr. Eyde has also written to Wells, Fargo & Co. to the effect that the fastenings on many cases containing films are insecure, consisting often merely of thin webbing, or badly worn straps. He advises that such cases are not to be regarded as securely fastened, and suggests that employees refuse to accept them for shipment.

The Film Exchange Board of Trade has answered the communications of the railroads and express companies, and has reassured them that it is making every effort to induce exhibitors to comply with the regulations, which it considers reasonable.

It is at a loss for a way to impress exhibitors any more forcibly than it has already done of the danger of having the hand carrying privileges taken away entirely, and is of the opinion that this will be the ultimate result unless greater care is exercised. It intimates that in case exhibitors continue to break the rules laid down for them, it will not come to the rescue as it did last spring, when it spent a large sum to secure legal talent and received no assistance from theatre owners.

"WHERE ARE MY CHILDREN" PASSES NEWARK CENSORS

The Censor Board of Newark, N. J., which consists of the Commissioner of Police and two assistants, has favorably passed "Where Are My Children?" There is a big demand in Newark for this picture both among exhibitors and patrons.

BILL FOR BETTER THEATRE LIGHTING IS ADVOCATED IN ST. LOUIS

Alderman Kraleman of St. Louis, introduced a bill before the Board of Aldermen last week, providing that motion picture theatres be lighted during the showing of pictures so that signs on the walls will be plainly visible and easy to read. This plan, it is claimed, would lend improvement from a moral standpoint.

All the modern theatres already have a system of soft lights whereby a patron coming in from the sunlit streets can easily see his way about, but a number of the older and less modern houses are not equipped with these lights, and they either are brilliantly lighted, or else as dark as night, with the exception of the little red exit lights.

CONFLICT OVER CANADIAN THEATRE TAXATION

The Dominion Government is willing to take the blame or responsibility for all the war taxation measures which it has been instrumental in imposing, but it refuses to be held responsible for Provincial levies. Sir Thomas White desires it to be distinctly understood that a misunderstanding exists as to the taxation imposed upon the tickets to the theatres and other places of amusement in some of the provinces, the public being under the impression that the tax has been imposed by the Dominion Government for war purposes. The Dominion Government, the Finance Minister asserts, has imposed no taxation of this character.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

By LONGACRE

A few weeks ago something slipped into this department. Also someone slipped that "something" over us. It was bad slipping all around.

The "someone," we suspect, was an employee discharged by the L-Ko Company, who thereupon wrote a so-called poem and sent it in to this paper. The "poem" had much better been scribbled on a wall, as such crudities generally are. It contained no wit, rythm, truth, nor application. There was nothing to justify its printing and every reason why it shouldn't be printed. But, in a disturbance of office routine it slipped through, as such things will, at least once in a paper's history.

We owe an apology to the L-Ko Company and to ourselves, principally to ourselves, we believe, because the reader will be most apt to discredit us for printing such trash and evolve an extra friendly feeling toward the L-Ko Company for being subjected to such treatment. He will ascribe an animus to us instead of crediting us with a mistake, which is an injustice to this publication. This sort of thing is decidedly apart from our policy and we regret it exceedingly.

WHY REVIEWERS ARE INTIMATE WITH THE FELLOWS ON THE SOBER SIDE OF THE BAR

"Just think, to see all the pictures you want for nothing and before they are censored too, that must be such fun!"

"And of course you can get into any theatre you want on your card, can't you?"

"I suppose your criticisms are constructive too. Destructive ones are so aggravating."

"Do you ever go to a show just for entertainment's sake?"

Naturally the question arises, says Robert Priest in words to that effect, just who Thomas H. Ince is. Well, Robert, we'll bite, who is he?

On Friday, October 6, Mrs. Edward Jose presented her husband with a nine pound daughter. She will be called Helene after her mother. To coin a phrase, both mother and daughter are doing well. Drop us a line Edward when Helene is old enough just to make talk.

Someone who swears there's not a trace of insanity in the family, sends this in:

There was a young girl from St. Paul,
Who was watching the Dodgers play ball.
When a foul in the stand
Just missed her right hand!
"Is Any Girl Safe" after all?

Thomas Jefferson, who once played Rip Van Winkle on the boards was shot at in a scene recently, but the bullet didn't take effect until twenty hours later when the following scene was made. "Get away Rip," said Thomas as he brushed the bullet from his collar.

World Film has changed the title of Marie Dressler's new picture from "Tillie's Night Out" to "Tillie's Day Off."

Far be it from us to intrude on the field of the scientific journals, but the following discovery of S. G. Sladdin's is so vital that it must create one of those epochs we hear so much about. "The nearest approach yet discovered to the fourth dimension," writes Mr. Sladdin, "in motion pictures, i. e. Depth; is found in the silhouette scenes in "The Crimson Stain Mystery." The fifth must be height then.

Florence La Badie recently brought out to the Thanhouser studio one of the dogs which she brought up in her New York apartment. The dog being used to elevators had to be carried upstairs at the studio. Mr. Thanhouser at Miss La Badie's suggestion is considering the installation of a complete elevator system in the studio in order that the dog may avoid such inconvenience in the future.

Herewith is another cause for the increasing mortality rate among scenario editors. The following came to William Fox's department:

Cast of Characters.

Philip Dale, clerk in clothing store—very dressy.
Harry Smart, assistant in automobile store.
Emma Stiles, milliner's apprentice girl.
Tricks do not always win the game.

5. Same scene. Philip shows kitten to Harry.
6. Same scene. Philip puts kitten in box and places it on mantel.
7. Same scene. Philip leaving.
8. Harry takes kitten out of box and puts frog in its place.
9. Miss Emma's room. Philip talking to her.
10. Same scene. She opens box and frog leaps out.

13. Same scene. Harry leaving.

FASHION NOTE.

It has been decreed by authorities more or less lofty in the business that actors will in future wear their hats in their hands instead of on their heads when entering the house, or when kissing feminine folk farewell on departing for the office. This will save wear and tear both on the hat and the head.

The Longacre Lampoon

All the News That Fits, We Print — Longacre Square, N. Y., October 14, 1916

EDITORIAL

A few directors and writers—they can be numbered on the fingers of one hand—seem to have come to the conclusion that good pictures can be made without dragging in murder and abduction. Off hand we can think of Lynn Reynolds, Agnes Johnston, Edith Bernard Delano—there are others, too. It strikes us that this is a fine time to give them a little extra credit.

We are not foolish enough to condemn an occasional murder just to help the story along. Murders happen often in real life, and it is the screen's business to picture realities. But when the fellows or fellowesses behind the 'script can make a picture interesting, even strongly entertaining by mirroring only the more pleasant things that go on in the world—we for one take off our hat to them.

Publicity Help with First Pickford Release

"How to Handle Mary Pickford Pictures," by Wells Hawks, Is Personal Contribution of the Star to Advertising Campaign of Artcraft Company

A COMPREHENSIVE line of publicity assistance is furnished by Artcraft Pictures Corporation with the release of Mary Pickford in "Less Than the Dust" on November 6. Not only has every detail of the routine and recognized methods of co-operating with the exhibitor been carefully attended to, but several interesting and unusual novelties of expected business-getting value are said to have been included in the campaign.

The "special" which is expected to create the most favorable comment is the little volume, "How to Handle Mary Pickford Pictures," written by Wells Hawks. Artcraft has ordered a generous supply for general distribution to exhibitors, whether showing the new productions of Mary Pickford or not. This volume is Mary Pickford's own contribution to the campaign. It expresses her own hopes for the future of her art, as revealed to Mr. Hawks, her personal representative in charge of publicity.

The printing, furnished by Miner, gives the exhibitor a choice of ten artistic styles for billboard advertising. Four styles are stock posters, showing Mary Pickford in new straight poses; the other six comprise the special printing ordered for "Less Than the Dust." Many exhibitors have ordered the stock posters, consisting of one 1-sheet, two 3-sheets and a 24-sheet, for their preliminary campaign, planning subsequently to cover these boards with the special production printing, of which there are two styles each of one and 3-sheets and also one six and one 24-sheet. An indication of how this feature of the Artcraft co-operative system is being received by exhibitors is shown by the example of the Majestic theatre in Dayton, Ohio. Gerber & Haas, managers of the Majestic, are using thirty-one 24-sheet stands of both stock and production posters. About two-thirds of this printing is used outside of Dayton.

More than thirty different styles of still photographs and character poses of Mary Pickford are used in the lobby displays designed for Artcraft exhibitors. An artistic herald, slides that harmonize with the atmosphere of "Less Than the Dust" and the usual cuts and the like are available.

The note of novelty in the lobby displays is provided by numerous oil paintings made for Artcraft by well known artists. Several character poses are available on easy rental terms. In addition there are oil paintings of Mary Pickford in straight new poses, which are being obtained by exhibitors as permanent display in their theatres. The mailing lists have been well taken care of with fine reproductions of these expensive oils on small cards.

Completing the co-operative scheme between Artcraft and exhibitor is the press book. There is everything required for newspaper publicity in the twenty-four pages of this volume. Filler paragraphs grow into column special stories for the feature section. There is a catalog of cuts and numerous sample advertisements, one of which is furnished free in matrix form for the advertiser who uses large space. The book also contains a complete list of accessories and sample order blanks for placing orders with the exchange managers.

There has been no hitch in the preliminary preparations and the sixteen exchanges of the new company distributing the productions of the Mary Pickford Film Corporation are well supplied in ample time before the November 6 release date.

ETHEL GRANDIN VISITS THEATRES SHOWING "CRIMSON STAIN"

Ethel Grandin, one of the stars of the Consolidated serial, "The Crimson Stain Mystery," has been unusually busy during the last week. Working in final instalments of the picture at the Erbograph studio in the daytime, she visited nightly four or five of the Loew houses in New York City and vicinity, on which circuit the serial is booked.

Practically everywhere she went the houses were filled to capacity, word having been received of her coming beforehand. The Overland automobile in which Miss Grandin made her several trips to the theatres was always the centre of great interest, as it is the same type of a car as the Consolidated company will award to the best scenario written around the characters and situations of "The Crimson Stain Mystery" on its completion.

Paramount Distributes Accessories Totaling $200,000

Company Issues Through Its Exchanges Elaborate Catalogue Under the Title of "Paramount Advertising Aids," Profusely Illustrated and Printed Attractively

ACCESSORIES of every description totaling an expenditure of over $200,000 are being distributed by the Paramount Pictures Corporation, through their exchanges throughout the country, in their "exhibitors aids" campaign which was inaugurated two months ago.

Last week, Paramount distributed to its exhibitors, through the exchanges, its elaborate catalogue of accessories under the title of "Paramount Advertising Aids." The book is profusely illustrated and printed very attractively, setting forth in every detail precisely in what manner these accessories can best be used in the plan of presenting better pictures in better theatres for a better public.

This book is furnished to every Paramount exhibitor for the purpose of bringing before them the many valuable requisites for publicity promotion that the distributing company has inaugurated and which are secured from the publicity departments of the different Paramount exchanges.

President Hiram Abrams, of Paramount in his letter to Paramount exhibitors regarding these aids says that this is "building material for the man who is ambitious to have a better, more attractive and more profitable theatre."

Illustrated fac-similies of the mat services issued by the publicity department are contained in the fore part of the book, included in which are pictured the half page mats issued bi-monthly and the weekly mat service in connection with Paramount Press, an illustrated weekly publicity medium and clip sheet.

A whole page is devoted to the electro plate service that is issued on all forthcoming release, explaining in its every detail the value of this service to the exhibitors. Each plate contains eight illustrations and stories of four forthcoming releases. Another page is devoted to the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures Bulletin, and shows plainly the aids that are being given on all the short reel productions of Paramount.

Many pages are devoted to the cuts of the stars in course and fine screen, single column, thumb nail and circular star cuts. These can be used in newspapers and in magazines, house organs and programs, and are an additional asset towards making the material used by exhibitors far more attractive.

The cuts of the stars are those of Marguerite Clark, Fanny Ward, Constance Collier, Lenore Ulrich, Dustin Farnum, Elsie Janis, Mary Pickford, Myrtle Stedman, John Barrymore, Pauline Frederick, George Beban, Cleo Ridgely, Mae Murray, Wallace Reid, Marjorie Daw, Marie Doro, Victor Moore, Theodore Roberts, Anita King, Charlotte Walker, Blanche Sweet, Hazel Dawn, Geraldine Farrar, Peggy Hyland, Vivian Martin, Ann Pennington, Winifred Kingston, Donald Brian, Louise Huff, Lou-Tellegen, Edna Goodrich, Kathlyn Williams and Sessue Hayakawa.

Cuts are also distributed in connection with the short reel subjects included in which are the trade marks of Burton Holmes, pictures of Col. Heeza Liar, Farmer Al. Falfa, Miss Nanny Goat, Master Bobby Bumps, the Police Dog and the trade marks of the Bray-Gilbert silhouette comedies.

Other pages in the catalogue are devoted to the cuts of scenes from the different productions, the advantage of Picture Progress, the monthly magazine issued by this organization, the new style of high class heralds that are being distributed, the 22 by 28 portrait enlargements of the stars for lobby display, what music is supplied with each production, the attractive star and short reel slides and a great assortment of advertising cuts for newspapers, magazines, house organs and programs, all of which are wonderfully attractive, running in size from 1 to 6 columns, together with all sizes of trade marks for letter heads, newspaper work and window cards.

The new designed one and twenty-four sheets are also shown in colors which are of a most attractive character, while to all exhibitors animated trade marks are also offered.

COBE PAYS A VISIT TO NEW YORK FOR UNITY AFFAIRS

Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president and general manager of the Unity Sales Corporation, spent Sunday and Monday in New York, going over important matters with the Unity officers in New York.

Mr. Cobe is spending practically all of his time in Chicago now, from which point he is handling matters that affect the distribution of Unity pictures through the exchanges.

"We are more than pleased with the progress we have made," says Mr. Cobe, "since we opened our Chicago office. It brings us into much closer touch with the exhibitors and enables us to render them much more efficient services. We were sure this was a good move and have every reason to feel sure that it will enable us to grow very much faster than we could have done by looking after everything from our New York office. I came to New York to confer with the other officers of our company in regard to the purchase of additional features. We have offers now for several big features, some of which will be acquired by us in the very near future."

One Picture a Month Is Record of Alice Brady

"Of Course It Is Hard Work," Declares Star of World Pictures, "But It Is Satisfying in a Great Many Respects"

ALICE BRADY is the star of seven of the picture plays to be released by the World Film Corporation before the end of May, 1917. These are "Bought and Paid For," "A Woman Alone," "The Girl and the Wager," "Darkest Russia," "The Madness of Helen," "Sinners," and "Frou Frou."

At this rate of productivity as an actress

Alice Brady

Miss Brady is portraying one new role every month, which is regarded as something of a feat considering that the process covers a long stretch of time and is not operated under special pressure.

"Of course this is hard work," said Miss Brady. "Not in spots, but regularly, without the slightest break. I should call it inexorable, for its exactions are never relaxed.

"When I was very new to the speaking stage I realized that I lacked experience, and I thought the best way to acquire it was to join a stock company where they changed the bill every week. So I played all summer in Dayton, Ohio, appearing in a new role every Monday and beginning to rehearse another every Tuesday morning.

"The plays were changed so often that we scarcely knew one of them before we were plunging into another and, of course, we fell into a rut in spite of ourselves. And then, if we were imperfect in our lines, we 'sensed' them as best we could, and slipped through somehow.

"This cannot be done in the pictures. One phrase may be made to do duty for another in the speaking drama, but you cannot make a substitute expression or action take the place of the real thing. In other words it is impossible to slur a scene or any portion of a scene in the pictures because the camera is sure to catch you at it if you try.

"This is what I meant by describing the work as inexorable. On the other hand it is satisfying in a great many respects. For one thing the pictures give us opportunities to see ourselves as others sees us, and incidentally to study our own imperfections. On the speaking stage we have to take the word of the critics or our friends regarding the value of our work.

"On the screen, however, we have to judge for ourselves—so that if we do miss the applause there are other advantages.

ETHEL CLAYTON AND BLACKWELL IN "WALL BEYOND"

Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell are co-tars in "The New South" and "The Wall Beyond," both World-Brady pictures, the former to be issued next month, and the latter in February.

PETROVA IS CAST AS WOMAN FINANCIER IN A METRO

Having finished "The Black Butterfly," Mme. Petrova has begun in the Popular Plays and Players studio on a new Metro production, adapted from a story by Anna Steese Richardson, in which the famous star takes the part of a woman financier. The scenario was written by Wallace C. Clifford, and Edmund Lawrence is directing the production.

The part taken by Mme. Petrova is peculiarly adapted to her, because she has some very decided views regarding woman's place in modern business life.

Mme. Petrova is collaborating with Mrs. L. Case Russell in a new motion picture play dealing with life on the Island of Corsica. She also has finished another play which gives a striking presentation of the "unwritten law."

Hobart Bosworth and Tully Marshall Join Lasky Forces

Two Well-Known Figures on Stage and Screen Will Soon Appear on Paramount Program—Both Chosen After Work in "Joan of Arc"

HOBART BOSWORTH and Tully Marshall, well know figures on stage and screen, have signed contracts with the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company to appear permanently in its productions on the Paramount Program. The engagement of these two distinguished actors by Lasky has in itself an element of drama. They were originally engaged by Cecil B. De Mille solely for his great production based on the story of Joan of Arc in which Geraldine Farrar is soon to star. So striking was the work which these two players did in that production that Mr. De Mille enthusiastically recommended that they be engaged by the Lasky company for its regular program features, and his suggestion was immediately carried into action.

When Mr. Bosworth appears in his first production under the new agreement, he will in fact make his re-appearance on the Paramount Program after a long absence. Those who have been in the motion picture industry for a few years will remember that at the formation of the Paramount Program the contributing producers were the Famous Players, Lasky and Bosworth companies.

Hobart Bosworth was the star of the pictures which were produced under his name. This company has since been expanded on the Paramount Program into the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures. Bosworth, meanwhile, tired of the managerial end of the business which proved too much of a burden in addition to his work before the camera, resigned from the company in order to devote himself entirely to screen work. Now he returns to the Paramount Program solely in the capacity of a player.

Hobart Bosworth

Hobart Bosworth's career before the camera is one of the most picturesque bits of motion picture history. A man of striking personality and remarkable talent, he was one of the first big stars to be released on the screen in the early days of the industry. Mr. Bosworth soon began to make a hit in the portrayal of characters of a rugged type, until he had become one of the foremost impersonators of the western types on the screen.

With the formation of the Bosworth Company, he made a great success of the stellar roles in such productions as "Buckshot John," "Odyssey of the North," "Burning Daylight" and others.

Tully Marshall is one of the best known actors on the screen to-day and has had a distinguished career before the footlights appearing in "Paid in Full," "The City," "The Talker," and numerous other well known plays. He is a valuable addition to the Lasky company.

Many Scenes Not Easily Obtainable Are in "Allah"

"Camels, Arabian Horses and Equipment for Caravans and Costumes for Several Thousand People, Besides Numerous Extra Properties Were Used in the Film," Says Selig

WILLIAM N. SELIG was interviewed recently concerning "The Garden of Allah," for rumors concerning the film drama have been flying fast in the motion picture trade.

"The production of 'The Garden of Allah' has been completed by Colin Campbell," said Mr. Selig. "The drama faithfully follows the book in every detail, and the production is the most elaborate and expensive we have ever made. Many scenes not easy to obtain were filmed, many extra properties were used not counting camels, Arabian horses, equipment for caravans and costumes for several thousand people.

"'The Garden of Allah' presents some very fine acting. Helen Ware, particularly, arises to emotional heights rarely seen on the stage or screen. She is ably supported by Thomas Santschi as Boris, Eugenie Besserer, Harry Lonsdale, James Bradbury as the Sand Diviner and others. The street scenes in the oasis of the Sahara desert are faithful and the bazars, mosques, and street scenes are massive.

"A desert sand storm will be found worthy and full of startling realism. The wind arises and sand comes in sheets, caravans scurry for shelter, tents are blown down, in fact it is a most vivid picture.

"The scenes in 'The Garden of Allah' are also beautiful as you will find. Many scenes never before shown in motion pictures, are presented. An attack by Bedouins on a caravan in an exciting spectacle.

"I have no hesitancy in praising 'The Garden of Allah,' and am firm in the belief that it will find instant admiration and popularity. We have spared no pains to make the production the finest in every detail."

DOROTHY BARRETT JOINS "U" SCENARIO STAFF

Dorothy Barrett has been added to the staff of Eugene B. Lewis, scenario editor at Universal City, as a reader of scripts. Miss Barrett was born in Bryn Mawr. Her father was a literary man of wide experience and a contributor to popular magazines. Practically her entire life up to 1912 was spent in European and world travel in general. She was educated in a prominent girls' school in Eastbourne, England, and at the American School for Girls in Rome, Italy. Besides this various periods of schooling were spent in all the principal countries of Europe.

In 1913, she left home in Bryn Mawr for New York, where she joined forces with J. B. Kerfoot, the literary critic and also her cousin. For two years she worked with Mr. Kerfoot and then, having become interested in motion pictures, she accepted an offer to enter the technical department of the Famous Players New York studio, remaining there for nearly a year.

Fox Announces Theda Bara in "Romeo and Juliet"

Screen Version of Shakespeare's Romantic Masterpiece to Be Given First Public Showing at Academy of Music, October 22—Harry Hilliard Is Cast as Romeo

WILLIAM FOX announces Theda Bara in a picturization of "Romeo and Juliet," Shakespeare's superb tragedy. This production will be released on the regular weekly Fox program.

It will be shown to the public for the first time at the Academy of Music on Oct. 22.

The film has been in work for many weeks at William Fox's studio in Fort Lee, N. J. Thousands of dollars were spent to insure absolute accuracy in details, as well as in essentials.

It was decided that five reels would make an effective screen version of "Romeo and Juliet." Acting, direction, scenario, photography, film cutting—everything in connection with the picture—was placed in charge of experts.

Miss Bara's success as an emotional artiste has been recognized internationally. William Fox has engaged a supporting cast which is strong and well balanced.

Harry Hilliard is cast for Romeo.

The cast is as follows: Juliet, Theda Bara; Romeo, Harry Hilliard; Mercutio, Glen White; Friar Laurence, Walter Law; Tybalt, John Webb Dillion; Paris, Einar Linden; Montague, Edwin Eaton; Capulet, Edwin Holt; Nurse, Alice Gale; Lady Montague, Victory Bateman, and Lady Capulet, Helen Tracy.

Glen White, Walter Law and John Webb Dillion, who have acted in many of William Fox's recent releases, are in the cast. Einar Linden will be recalled for his performance as Don Jose in the Fox picturization of "Carmen." Mr. Linden also had prominent parts in "The Eternal Sapho" and "The Family Stain."

Alice Gale has a record of thirty years' success on the stage. For several seasons she acted the Nurse in the legitimate. She also appeared in "Sins of Men." The others in the cast have been in moving pictures for years. Jane and Katherine Lee will not be missed from the production. These two children have the parts of pages.

J. Gordon Edwards, who has made most of the Bara photoplays, was in charge of the direction.

Trip of Edith Storey a Series of Ovations

Crowds Turn Out in Big Cities to Welcome Star as She Passes Through on Way to Los Angeles—Arrival on the 12th Completes Her Itinerary

A TREMENDOUS ovation has been extended to Edith Storey and her mother, who accompanies her on the trip she has taken which brought her into Los Angeles on the night of October 12. From Chicago and the other cities on her itinerary, telegrams, letters and newspaper clippings by the score have poured into the home office, all being in appreciation of her splendid personality and her readiness to fall into plans made for her reception.

An executive committee of the Exhibitors' League met Miss Storey's train in Chicago and conducted her to the Sherman House. At 6:30 the same evening, conducted by Sidney E. Abel, Vitagraph V-L-S-E branch manager, Miss Storey and her mother visited seven representative theatres and then sat down to supper in the College Inn, which was decorated for the occasion with portraits of Miss Storey, blue ribbons and tastefully worded place cards. Present at this supper were the largest theatre owners in Chicago and the photoplay editors of the Chicago trade and daily newspapers.

The following morning Miss Storey and her mother, Robert McKnight, of the Chicago Examiner; Mrs. Lawrence, of the Evening Post, and Mr. Laurence and Manager Abel were taken through the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet by L. M. Rubens, who controls six motion picture theatres in that city. Miss Storey was handcuffed in a cell and later said that she thoroughly enjoyed her experience.

The same evening Miss Storey appeared in half a dozen more of Chicago's finest photoplay theatres. Everywhere she went she was greeted by enthusiastic crowds who fought to gain admittance.

Chicago theatres took advantage of her visit to book features in which she is starred, with the result that they all did capacity business during her stay.

In St. Louis her Chicago experiences were practically duplicated.

Hoffman Issues Manual to Bluebird Salesmen

Suggestions for Selling and Meeting Exhibitors' Objections Given in Comprehensive Booklet—Includes Science of Salesmanship and Advertising Policy

A MOST comprehensive sales manual has just been issued to the Bluebird exchanges by General Manager M. H. Hoffman, entitled, "Why." In it Mr. Hoffman incorporates many of his sales talks that have been issued to exchange and salesmen during the period since the inception of the Bluebird company, while at the same time he has added many new paragraphs in which he brings out the arguments for the selling of the Bluebird features.

The manual, which is attractively gotten up, bound in stiff blue paper and printed on rough edged stock, is divided into sections under the following heads: The Science of Salesmanship, Dialogue, Advertising Mediums, Reasons for Bluebird Perfection, Advertising Policy, Authors, Exploiting Stars Will Hurt Industry, Answers to Objections, Connection with Universal, Drawing Power, The Quality Objection, Open Booking Objection, Story Interest vs. Star, Bluebird Stars in Other Programs, Cost Objection, Red Feathers Coast Less—Objection, The Deposit Objection, Objections by Universal Exhibitors, No Higher Cost to Produce, Too Much Universal, Bluebird and Universal the Same.

Each of these heads is subdivided and various arguments that the salesman will meet against his product are discussed and suggestions given as to the correct answers.

Mr. Hoffman precedes the text of his manual with the following signed announcement: There are so many good and sufficient reasons for the rise and continued pre-eminence of Bluebird Photoplays, that salesmanship for these features is only a matter of knowing the real facts. Much of the subject matter of this little, handy volume, or manual of salesmanship, has been sent to exchanges before in my sales talks, but it has been my endeavor to set down these talks and others in such manner as to form a book of ready reference for the salesman whose happy lot it is to sell Bluebirds. The arguments which he can use, and the answers to possible objections which may be raised, have been carefully set down in sequence and indexed. They are presented to you in the earnest hope that these talks may be of real assistance in the pleasurable task of the Bluebird Salesman.

MARCUS LOEW BOOKS "PRUDENCE," WITH MISS HULETTE

Gladys Hulette, in the Thanhouser-Pathe feature, "The Shine Girl," was such a success in the Marcus Loew theatres in Greater New York that Mr. Loew has booked "Prudence, the Pirate," Miss Hulette's next picture, for nearly all of his theatres and is advertising Miss Hulette to appear in person wherever "Prudence" is shown.

Miss Hulette will take Panthus, the ugliest pup in the world, with her when she appears at the Loew theatres.

MICHELENA COMPANY BACK FROM THE WILDS

The producing company of the California Motion Picture Corporation, headed by Beatriz Michelena, has just returned from the redwood wilds, back of Lagunitas, California, popularly known as the "Bad Lands of Marin County," has unbuckled spurs, holsters and guns used in "The Passion Flower," and is now experiencing a general costume metamorphosis preparatory to first work on the next big production.

Back with the company came many tales of big game exploits in the hills, and as evidence of veracity no less than a dozen pairs of deer antlers somehow procured.

Miss Michelena very modestly claims but one pair of the horns as the result of her marksmanship. For the balance there is a grand controversy between such celebrities as Andrew Robson, Albert Morrison, Clarence Arper, et als.

A feature of the company's stay at Lagunitas was a deer barbecue provided by the California Northwestern Railroad crew in its honor. Conductor Jim O'Rourke was master of ceremonies.

Edison Has Six Features for New Combine

First Releases Through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Already Completed Embrace Variety of Subjects—"Heart of the Hills" Centres Around Theft of Jewels in India

THE first picture to be released by Edison through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service is "The Heart of the Hills," which is scheduled for October 30. It will be followed in turn by "A Message to Garcia," "The Ghost of Old Moro," "The Princess from the Poorhouse," "The Cossack Whip" and "The Ladder of Ambition" at intervals not yet decided These pictures, it is said, are all completed and are ready to be placed on the market at any time.

"The Heart of the Hills" is a story of adventure and romance centering around a priceless gem that is stolen from its resting place in India. The leads in this are taken by Mabel Trunelle, well konwn in past Edison releases and Conway Tearle, equally prominent on the stage, who only recently made his debut in picture work.

"A Message to Garcia" is based on the famous preachment by the late Elbert Hubbard. It has been widely read throughout the world and the Edison Company has given it a forceful and artistic production, transplating the spirit of the book to the screen with fine effect. Mabel Trunelle again stars in this feature, while opposite her appears Robert Conness. The scene of the story is Cuba, and the exteriors were made there.

"A Ghost of Old Moro" is another picture with a Cuban setting, many of the scenes centering around old Moro Castle, the historical fortress of the island. In the filming of this picture the Edison authorities secured permission from the Cuban government to "shoot" scenes that had heretofore been prohibited.

Francine Larrimor, who scored effectively on Broadway last season in "Fair and Warmer" takes the leading part in "The Princess from the Poorhouse," which is described as a "fairy tale from real life." A capable company including Richard Tucker, Charles Sutton, Herbert Pattee and William Wadsworth supports Miss Larrimor in this. Although this is her first appearance on the screen, it is said that she appears to exceedinlgly good advantage.

A story of Russia and Russian intrigue is presented in "The Cossak Whip." It comes from the pen of James Oppenheim, who is thoroughly acquainted with the conditions and times he writes about. "The Ladder of Ambition" is a type of story that has a general and strong appeal. It concerns a woman whose ambitions wreck her life. Redemption comes in the end, but not before some situations of the most appealing and dramatic sort have been introduced.

In speaking of these features an official of the Edison Company says: "In every selection the utmost care has been used in the section of the story, this being given precedence over any other feature of the production. The cats have been made up of players, who possessed the qualifications to best portray the characterizations demanded by the scripts. Players have been secured from both the legitimate and motion picture ranks. Everything has been sacrificed to secure intrinsic merit in the productions, and the results have more than justified the tireless efforts that have been made at the studio.

New Sub-Title Department Started at Universal City

Hand Drawn and Lettered Sub-Titles in Future Universal Features—Clay Modeling and Papier Mache Department Greatly Enlarged, with H. R. Schmohl in Charge —Great Variety of Objects Made

TO improve and beautify the titles and sub-titles of Universal, Red Feather and Blue Bird films, a new department has been added at Universal City, where hand-drawn and lettered titles will be made. This new department, which contains five men, two for drawing borders and three for lettering, has been organized by Screen Editor Gettings, who is in charge of the cutting department. Mr. Gettings and his staff of twelve men weekly edit approximately forty reels of finished product. The first subject to contain the new art titles will be released in about a month.

Another department at the film city to be greatly enlarged and improved is that for the modelling and molding of clay, papier mache and other composition work. Perfect detail has long been a hobby of General Manager H. O. Davis, and several months ago he sought to improve settings by adding correctly modeled decorations. While serving as director-general of the San Diego exposition Mr. Davis secured the services of H. R. Schmohl to supervise the decoration of buildings, and several months ago this artist was induced to take the position as head of the modeling department at the Universal.

Models of all kinds have been made under the supervision of Mr. Schmohl and his assistants, who at times number as many as twenty-five. Some wonderful statues have been made, some from life poses of Universal players. Butterflies, gobblins, reptiles, large insects and numerous other freaks have been made here, to say nothing of hundreds of dishes and articles of different design needed for productions. A recent addition to the staff, engaged by Mr. Davis, is Richard Zeitner, a clay modeler of thirty years' experience.

Visitors at Universal City have found the modeling department one of great interest, especially the making of objects from clay, which provides for the moulding of objects by hand.

LYONS, CAMERAMAN, GOES TO CHRISTIE

Reggie Lyons, for six years cameraman with the Vitagraph Company at its Long Island studio, who recently went to the coast, has been engaged as photographer by Al. E. Christie, and will be in charge of filming Christie comedies.

APFEL STARTS TENTH FOX PICTURE

Oscar C. Apfel, who has already directed the screening of nine pictures for William Fox starts this week on his tenth.

FOX COMPANY COVERS ALL OF CALIFORNIA

A large part of California is being used in screening Gladys Brockwell's new photodrama for William Fox. The first work was done at the Fox studios near Los Angeles. Then the company, sixty-one strong, boarded a special train for Sacramento. Not content with that trip, they journeyed from the capital city to San Francisco, where several more scenes for the photoplay were snapped. The San Barnadinos supplied the mountain views. In Sacramento alone, eighteen stage carpenters were employed to erect the various sets needed there.

Lasky Scenario Department Is Again Expanded

Increased Activities of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Necessitates Further Addition—Paul West Joins Company for Script Work—Harvey Thew Transferred to West Coast

WHEN the Famous Players and Lasky companies first merged into one corporation, Hector Turnbull was transferred from the Lasky studio to the main office in New York, Robert E. MacAlarney, city editor of the New York Tribune, was engaged and Harvey Thew was added to the force. The greatly increased activities of the producing organizations which have followed the merger have rendered necessary still further additions and transfers.

Paul West, well known author and dramatist, has been engaged by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and two transfers of office have been made. William C. De Mille, one of the foremost theatrical and motion picture authorities in the country, who has been associated with the Lasky Company from its inception, comes to New York from Hollywood to confer personally with Jesse L. Lasky on scenarios. Mr. De Mille had gained a world-wide reputation as a playwright before he entered the motion picture field and has contributed many notable scripts to the screen, among them the adaptation of "Carmen" in which Geraldine Farrar made her triumphant motion picture debut, "The Woman," "The Rose of the Rancho" and others of equal prominence.

Paul West, who now joins the scenario department, has a remarkable literary record. He has written ten musical comedies and published three books, and was one of the editors of the New York Sunday World for several years. When Jesse L. Lasky was producing some of his biggest vaudeville successes, Mr. West was the author of several of the biggest hits, among them "The Love Waltz" and "At the Waldorf."

Mr. West is the author of more than a hundred and fifty photoplays which have already appeared on the screen and now has fifteen more ready for production. Among the most successful of the feature plays already screened are "The Velvet Paw," "The Dark Silence," "The Lash," in which Marie Doro is starred by Lasky, "The Chattel," in which E. H. Sothern starred, and others of equal prominence. He is also the author of numerous newspaper syndicate stories, among them "Bill," "The Widow Wiser" and "In Our School."

After supplying these vital statistics to his biographer Mr. West added that he is rich, handsome and neutral on the subject of the coming election and World's Series.

The third change in the scenario department is the transferring of Harvey Thew, formerly stationed in the main office of New York, to Hollywood, where the Lasky Studios are situated. Mr. Thew is well known in literary circles, having been war correspondent for the New York Herald. He has already adapted to the screen two Paramount Pictures, "The Kiss," in which Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot are co-starring, and "The Big Sister," in which Mae Murray was recently presented by the Famous Players.

The addition of new members to the force and the transfer of the present constituents from one coast to the other presages even bigger results for the combined organizations. It is a concrete example of the determination on the part of the producers to bend every effort toward the elevation of a scenario standard already acknowledged as being the highest attained by any company in the industry. It is an assurance to exhibitors that the Paramount Program, on which the productions of these companies are released, will advance its standards of quality.

Clara Kimball Young Starts on Second Picture

An Adaptation of Thomas Dixon's Novel, "The Foolish Virgin," to Be Her Next Offering—"The Common Law" Given Enthusiastic Reception in Boston

WITH the first of her own company's offerings, "The Common Law," a triumphant success, Clara Kimball Young resumed her studio activity this week in the preparation of her second big production, a film version of Thomas Dixon's widely read novel, "The Foolish Virgin."

Work on this second picture was interrupted for the past week owing to Miss Young's many engagements in connection with the pre-release showings of "The Common Law" in New York and Boston. The enthusiastic scenes that marked the showings last week at all the Marcus Loew theatres in New York City, were repeated on Monday night, October 2, at the Globe Theatre in Boston.

Miss Young, accompanied by Mrs. Lewis J. Selznick, appeared in person before audiences that packed the Boston theatre to the doors and overflowed by hundreds into the street. She was accorded a tumultuous reception and the newspapers of the Hub city were unanimous in giving the production of the Chambers novel the highest sort of praise. Miss Young was also tendered a reception in Boston at which the Governor of Massachusetts was ths guest of honor.

Director General Albert Capellani has made rapid progress with the scenic construction for the second production. Many of the exterior scenes in which Miss Young does not appear have already been taken, and it is expected that the picture will be finished and ready for release early in November. Among the noted players who will appear in important roles in "The Foolish Virgin," are Conway Tearle, who scored such a brilliant hit in the role opposite Miss Young in "The Common Law" and Paul Capellani, who has been seen in a number of Miss Young's biggest productions and whose work in "The Common Law," in the role of Querida, attracted wide attention.

Others in the cast include Catherine Proctor, William Welsh, Marie Lines, Agnes Mapes, Edward Elkas, and the two well-known child players, Sheridan Tansey and Jacqueline Merhange.

Four Well-Known Directors Now with Thanhouser

Frederick Sullivan, Eugene Moore, Ernest Warde and Oscar A. C. Lund Well Equipped by Past Experience for Present Work

EDWIN THANHOUSER, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, which concern releases two five-reelers a month on the Pathe program, has built up an able and thoroughly experienced staff of directors who have already turned out some profitable features for both the producing and releasing companies.

Frederic Sullivan, Florence La Badie's director, who did "The Fugitive," "The Fear of Poverty" and others has been with Mr. Thanhouser since 1913. He was born in England, the nephew of Sir Arthur Sullivan, the composer, and was educated at Rugby. An extensive career as stage producer preceeded by newspaper work fitted him well for his present position. Mr. Sullivan is a great believer in applying the psychology of music to his directorial work, and oftentimes has an orchestra playing off scene to enable the players to get the desired tempo in their acting.

Eugene Moore, who studied for the ministry has been with Thanhouser since 1912. He had an extensive stage career with such stars as Edwin Booth, John McCullough, Frederick Warde, Louis James and Stuart Robson in Shakesperian plays. He recently completed a feature starring Jeanne Eagels, which will be released by Pathe.

Ernest Warde, formerly stage director for Richard Mansfield, is the son of Frederick Warde, a well known Shakesperian actor, who is now a member of the Thanhouser stock. His two most recent pictures are "King Lear," which will be released in December, and "Through the Open Door," from a story by Emmet Mix with Marie Shotwell starring for the first time on the screen.

Oscar A. C. Lund is the most recent addition to the Thanhouser staff of directors. His work with the Eclair, Metro, World and Universal companies, is already well known. He is a writer as well as director, and among the pictures to which he claims authorship and which he also produced are "Autumn," "The Dollar Mark," "The Marked Woman," "Silent Jim," "The Price of Malice" and "Dorian's Divorce." These featured such stars as Lionel Barrymore, Hamilton Revelle, Violet Mersereau, Barbara Tennant, Robert Warwick and Harry Carey. Mr. Lund is now directing Gladys Hulette, star of "The Shine Girl."

WILLIAMS GETS BACK INTO THE DAILY GAME

Contrary to reports, Al Williams, who served for more than a year as assistant publicity director of the Mutual under Terry Ramsaye, director of publicity, did not accompany the corporation to Chicago.

Williams has returned, temporarily, to newspaper work, at present being a member of the editorial staff of the New York Evening Journal, a position he resigned two years ago to become associated with Arthur James, now of Metro, who was then directing the Mutual's publicity.

Williams was particularly active in the publicity campaign which followed the signing of Charlie Chaplin by Mutual, one of his most prominent efforts in this connection being the story of Chaplin's life, which in the following months found its way into thousands of papers and magazines throughout this country and England.

Williams had planned to accompany the Mutual on its removal to Chicago, but at the last moment decided to return to newspaper work.

FIVE-COLOR PICTURES OF MRS. CASTLE IN NEWSPAPERS

The first of a series of pictures of Mrs. Vernon Castle, star of the International's preparedness serial "Patria" appeared on Sunday in 28 newspapers throughout the United States. The pictures are printed in five colors, and occupy the entire front page of the illustrated magazine section of the paper.

The series is entitled "Heroines of American History." The first shows Mrs. Castle in the familiar pose of Molly Pitcher. The second, which will be issued next Sunday, depicts Mrs. Castle as Betty Ross; the third as Molly Stark and the fourth as Patria Channing, the modern American heroine of "Patria," who sacrifices so much for her country.

The twenty-eight papers in which the pictures will be printed has a combined circulation of more than 3,250,000, so that each of the four pictures in which Mrs. Castle depicts an American heroine will be seen by approximately 16,275,000 persons in the United States, or more than one-seventh of the entire population.

WARNER BUYS NEW YORK RIGHTS TO "PURITY"

The New York rights for "Purity," the American Film Manufacturing Company's production, featuring Audrey Munson, have been bought by the Dispatch Film Corporation of 145 West Forty-fifth street. This concern has been recently organized by Harry Warner, formerly of Warner's Features and Walter Scheuer.

Commencing October 16 the picture will be shown for four one-week runs at the following theatres: Apollo, Bronx Strand, Keeney's, Brooklyn, and the B. S. Moss Circuit. The price is one thousand dollars per week.

This concern has also obtained the New York rights to the Ella Wheeler Wilcox series of two-reel comedies, six of which have been completed and are ready for release. An announcement concerning the theatres in which they have been booked will appear in the near future.

Irene Fenwick Returns to Screen Under Famous Players Banner

Stage Star Will Be Seen in "Princess Zim Zim," with Owen Moore Playing Opposite—Actress Appears in Sheldon Drama

IRENE FENWICK, the stage star, who is now appearing in "The Guilty Man," has been engaged by the Famous Players Film Company and will be starred by that concern in "Princess Zim Zim" on the Paramount Program, with Owen Moore playing opposite.

Irene Fenwick

The record of Irene Fenwick on the stage is an enviable one. To trace only a few of her accomplishments, there is "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," in which she played opposite Douglas Fairbanks; "Along Came Ruth," in which she played the title role with great success; "The Song of Songs," in which she scored a great personal hit—and now "The Guilty Man."

Miss Fenwick's first Paramount picture will be "Princess Zim Zim," in which she plays the role of a Coney Island dancer who mixes into New York's exclusive and uppish upper crust. Tessie Mooney, alias the Princess Zim Zim, is the daughter of the burly owner of the Turkish Dream, a side show at Coney Island. A broken romance, considerable selected liquor and a tramp are the means, direct and indirect, of propelling a young society chap into Mooney's little place at a time when the absence of the piano player makes his talented fingers most acceptable. He is down and out and very glad to accept the $10 a week offered by Mooney for his services at the piano.

Of course there is a romance quickly under way between the young aristocrat and Tessie—but it is not the conventional romance nor does it end in the customary manner.

The engagement of Miss Fenwick was done at the suggestion of Edward Sheldon, the author of the script. Mr. Sheldon wrote the play "The Song of Songs," in which Miss Fenwick scored such a great hit and he declared that he believed her to be an ideal type for the role, after watching her work on the stage. The Famous Players had been holding the script for some time while searching for the right star to play the Princess.

Norma Talmadge Latest Star Netted by Selznick

Former Triangle Star Heads Own Company Formed by Joseph Schenck—First Picture to Be Adaptation of David Graham Phillips' Novel, "The Price She Paid"

ON the heels of his successful launching of the first of the Selznick-Pictures, Clara Kimball Young in "The Common Law," Lewis J. Selznick announces the addition to his list of stars of Norma Talmadge, whose work in recent Triangle productions has made her a screen favorite.

Joseph Schenck, of the Marcus Loew forces, is responsible for Miss Talmadge's new venture, having organized the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, of which he is the president. Mr. Schenck will have offices with the Selznick Enterprises in the Godfrey Building, on Seventh Avenue, and will also produce for Selznick-Pictures feature photoplays starring other screen celebrities.

The first of Miss Talmadge's new pictures will be an adaptation of "The Price She Paid," a novel by David Graham Phillips. The production will be directed by Allan Dwan, who has produced a number of Miss Talmadge's Triangle pictures, and who attracted special attention for his skill in the production of recent Douglas Fairbanks features.

Miss Talmadge is one of the youngest of all film stars who have attained anything like her prominence. Her first work of note was done with the Vitagraph company, and it was after her portrayal of the leading role in that organization's notable production, "'The Battle Cry of Peace," that the young star was sought by the Triangle management. Two of her most recent successes were "Going Straight" and "The Social Secretary."

In "The Price She Paid," Miss Talmadge will have an opportunity to enact a role different from anything she has heretofore attempted and one that seems certain to prove her the possessor of extraordinary dramatic power and emotional skill.

The success of the negotiations for the rights to this famous novel was due to Edgar Selden, who has been working months to obtain this and others of David Graham Phillips' work for Mr. Selznick. Many film producers have attempted to secure the rights to the works of this famous American author, but Mr. Selznick is the first to have any success. The amount involved in the transaction for "The Price She Paid" is not stated.

This price, however, is said by an official of the company to be greater by several thousands of dollars than any sum ever offered for a single motion picture scenario.

Miss Talmadge will be presented in about eight big features a year, along lines similar to other Selznick-Pictures, such as Clara Kimball Young, Herbert Brenon and Kitty Gordon features. The Talmadge productions will be marketed on the open booking plan through the big system of exchanges built up by Mr. Selznick.

ANOTHER STAGE FOR FOX

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, Oct. 14.

The two studios of the William Fox producing companies, one located in Edendale and the other in Hollywood, suburbs of Los Angeles, have again proved to be of inadequate size for the producing staff, and General Manager A. Carlos has caused the erection of another stage 60 by 120 feet.

The new stage is built upon the city block immediately across the street from the Hollywood studio at Sunset and Western avenues. The ground was recently leased to be used for exterior settings. A few days after the lease was made Mr. Carlos found another stage needed, and this was completed about three weeks ago. An army of workmen are now busy in building the additional stage, which increases the number of stages to three at the Hollywood plant, one of which is 100 by 300 feet, and two at the Edendale studio.

GENERAL FILM SERVICE calls especial attention of exhibitors to the notable stars appearing in its program October 23-28, inclusive. There are twenty-eight in all, as follows:

Robyn Adair, Virginia Kirtley, Shirley Moore, Huntley Gordon, Mary Pickford, Richard Travers, Marguerite Clayton, "Ham" and "Budd," Ethel Teare, Henry Murdock, Mae Marsh, Harry Myers, Rosemary Theby, Marin Sais, True Boardman, Babe Hardy, Raymond McKee, Kate Price, Marie Empress, George Larkin, Ollie Kirkby, "Pokes" and "Jabbs," John Cossar, Helen Gibson, Frances Benedict, Thomas Commerford, Tom Mix and Victoria Forde.

It will be noticed that there are two new stars featured in General Film Service during the week referred to, in the presence of Kate Price and Raymond McKee, the former widely known for her intelligent, clever work with Vitagraph and Triangle, and the latter for his excellent exhibitions with Edison. These names ought to add strength to General Film Service. They are featured in Vim comedies, and will be seen in General Film Service hereafter each week.

"Out of the Shadows," a two-part Selig drama, will be the first picture shown. "Paradise for a Day" will round out this picture to two reels, in which Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley are featured. This will be followed by a Vitagraph one-reel comedy, "Trouble for Four," with Shirley Moore and Huntley Gordon as fun makers. All the news of the world will then be pictorially shown by the Selig-Tribune, and the day's program will be closed with "Friends," a Biograph reissue with charming Mary Pickford, heroine.

The next day Essanay's two-act drama, "Borrowed Sunshine," with Richard Travers and Marguerite Clayton will head the list. Then will come a Kalem comedy in one-reel, "The Bogus Booking Agents" presenting "Ham" and "Budd," Ethel Teare and Henry Murdock. "The Battle at Elderbush Gulch," a drama in two parts reissued by Biograph, with Mae Marsh.

Essanay leads the list again Wednesday, October 25, when the fable of "The Throbbing Genius of a Tank Town, Who was Encouraged by Her Folks Who Were Prominent," a one-reel comedy based on a George Ade story is shown. This will be followed by a Vim comedy, "Green Eyes," featuring Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby. Then will come the twelfth episode of Kalem's "The Girl from 'Frisco," "The Harvest of Gold" with Marin Sais and True Boardman as heroine and hero.

Selig-Tribune pictorial news will have the spot light Thursday, October 26, aided by a Vim comedy "A Maid to Order" with the new stars Kate Price and Raymond McKee supporting Vim's widely known comedian Babe Hardy.

A Knickerbocker Star Feature, "The Chorus Girl and the Kid," a two-part drama, heads the list for Friday, October 27. In this, talented Marie Empress is featured. Then will be shown "The Missing Heiress" the second episode of Kalem's new series "Grant, Police Reporter" in which George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby have the stellar roles. A Vitagraph comedy "Betty's Affair" and a Vim one-reel comedy "The Frame-Up" with "Pokes" and Jabs" will close the program for that day.

Saturday, October 28 will be ushered in with "It Never Could Happen," an Essanay comedy-drama in three acts with Richard Travers, John Cossar, Frances Benedict, Thomas Commerford and Anna Mae Walthall. "The Lost Messenger," an episode of Kalem's "Hazards of Helen Series" with Helen Gibson in the titular role, will be the next picture shown, and the week's program will be closed with a one-act drama "A Close Call," featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde.

Classic Music for "Romeo and Juliet," from Metro

Irene Berg and Samuel Berg Prepare the Score, Based on Gounod's Opera of the Same Name and Tschaikowsky's Symphony of the Same Title

WHEN "Romeo and Juliet" is presented by the Metro Picture Corporation it will carry a pretentious setting of classical music, arranged by Irene Berg and Samuel M. Berg. The two composers completed the musical score only after weeks of infinite labor. As basis for their score they took Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet" and Tschaikowsky's symphony of the same title.

Into the score have been written motifs for each of the chief characters and in the large scenes the music is arranged so as to synchronize with the action down to the last detail. The love motif was taken from Tschaikowsky, those for the characters of Romeo and Juliet were found in Gounod. Both pieces were extensively drawn upon for every remaining motive in the play.

Both the composers declare their work to be up to their highest expectations. Both were well qualified for the difficult task of arranging a proper musical setting for such a well known offering. Mr. Berg was a student under Massenet in Paris. He has conducted orchestras in Paris, and Covent Garden, London. In America he was conductor for the first companies of "The Chocolate Soldier" and "Everywoman." He is also a composer of reputation, having written such light operas as "Nicolette," "The Knave of Hearts" and "The Haymakers."

Mr. Berg is already well known in the motion picture field. He has been connected with it for ten years. His musical arrangements for many of the pictures released by the feature companies have attracted great attention.

He has arranged music for the Metro Company since the formation of that organization.

"The beauty of the 'Romeo and Juliet' musical arrangement," said Mr. Berg, "is that while it will be produced in the larger houses with an orchestra of forty pieces, it nevertheless can be rendered with equally satisfying results by an organ or violins and a piano."

"Tours Around the World" Is Next Gaumont-Mutual Series

Scenic Subjects Will Be Interwoven with Pictures of Foreign Industries, Methods and Customs in Latest Line of Travel Film

WITH the initial issue of "Mutual Tours Around the World" November 7, the Gaumont Company offers exhibitors the fourth weekly single-reel release from its studios. The new pictures will be primarily scenic in their nature, but there will also be characteristic views of foreign industries, methods and customs. This now fills the one gap in the list of Gaumont single-reels.

"Mutual Tours" will regard as its own province any country other than the United States and its possessions, these being pictured in the entertaining "See America First" series. Through its affiliations with thte Gaumont parent house in Paris and its branches all over the world, the American company can offer foreign pictures that an exhibitor could not hope to secure elsewhere.

The natural desire of people to visit the out-of-the-way, picturesque places of the world as well as the more renowned cities will be gratified by "Mutual Tours." This weekly release will give not only views such as a traveler would glimpse, but also more intimate pictures of national life.

If the authoritative and interesting articles about foreign lands found in the National Geographical Magazine could be transferred directly to the screen, they would represent the aim of the Gaumont Company in selecting and editing subjects for "Mutual Tours Around the World."

"Mutual Tours" is the fourth single-reel release to come weekly from the Gaumont Laboratories. The others are the Mutual Weekly, the screen newspaper, "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine, and "See America First," splitting the reel with Gaumont's Kartoon Komics.

The Latest Portraits of Olga Petrova, Metro's Star

Winners of World Contest Will Know Luck on January 1

"Conducting One of These Contests Is a Hard Road to Travel," Says Brady, "But If It Leads Anywhere I Will Be Ready to Start All Over."

THE $5,000 prize play contest of the World Film Corporation closed September 15, and the formal announcement of the winning authors will be made January 1, 1917. The interval will be none too long for the task of weighing the values of the manuscripts not already disposed of, as the number of plays and stories submitted in response to Mr. Brady's invitation has been enormous.

The merely mechanical operation of keeping track of these and returning to the owners the material found to be unsuitable at the first reading has required the constant attention of a large clerical force, and the gradual sifting down of the contributions which passed the initial tests has been an undertaking of ever increasing exactions.

"In the final roundup," said Director General William A. Brady, "there will be nineteen accepted manuscripts, the one considered best among these taking the first prize of $1,000; the second best $750; the third $650; fourth $500; fifth $400; sixth $300; seventh $200; next twelve $100 apiece.

"To handle such a contest at all is what a slangy person might describe as 'some job.' To do it without giving offense in some instances is an utter impossibility, for, alas, there is no such thing as convincing the authors of some rejected manuscripts that they are not immeasurably superior to the ones which have passed muster.

"There are endless reasons why a really meritorious work may be unsuitable for production, but of course we cannot go into these in every instance where we return a play or story. If we were to try, we should not be through with the tailings of this contest during the next two or three years.

"So we must be content to do our level best with the likelihood that some of the nineteen prize winners will think our judgment was all right, while several thousands of those whose writings failed to pass will be convinced to the contrary entirely beyond argument.

"I will say at this time that I believe we have uncovered a good deal of real talent during the progress of the contest. We shall benefit from this not alone in the material we receive directly for our various awards but from the very considerable number of unsuccessful aspirants whose contributions showed aptitude sufficient to warrant me in encouraging them to further effort.

"I certainly hope so, for good material is scarce and becoming scarcer. The growing colume of productions make this a serious matter for those of us who look ahead. The stage plays are rapidly being exhausted and we will soon be compelled to dig deep for fresh sources of supply.

"Conducting one of these contests is a hard road to travel, but if it leads anywhere I shall be ready to start all over."

THE DAILY ADVANCE
Lynchburg, Va., October 12, 1916.

Mr. Wm. A. Johnston, Motion Picture News, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

My dear Sir:

A keen sense of appreciation compels me to acknowledge a copy of your latest studio directory which was included with the last issue of Motion Picture News. The latest edition far outstrips the initial publication and I have already added it to my library for reference purposes, fully realizing its worth when I find myself confronted with such problems as only a photoplay editor is asked to solve. The value of this work is incalculable. I can readily see the use which producers can make of it in looking about for talent for certain parts, and I dare say that the demand will in a short while exhaust your supply. The directory fills a void which has always existed in the film industry, and you are to be congratulated for your enterprise and foresight in compiling the work which is now in its second edition.

Very truly yours,
Julian T. Baber,
Photoplay Editor,
The Daily Advance.

CHARLOTTE WALKER ENGAGED BY THANHOUSER

Charlotte Walker has joined the Thanhouser Film Corporation, and will begin work immediately upon a five-reel feature by Lloyd Lonergan, to be released through the Pathe exchanges.

O. A. C. Lund, who has directed such players as Gladys Hulette, Robert Warwick, Lionel Barrymore and Barbara Tennant, will be Miss Walker's Thanhouser director.

It is Edwin Thanhouser's policy to sign for his play actors particularly suited to the parts, and the list of Thanhouser artists now includes Miss Walker, Vincent Serrano, Jeanne Eagels, and Valkyrien added, of course, to Florence La Badie, Frederick Warde, Gladys Hulette, Doris Grey and Wayne Arey, who for some time have been firmly established as stars in Thanhouser features.

Charlotte Walker (Thanhouser)

In her first Thanhouser feature Miss Walker will play the part of a girl convicted of murder, who escapes and marries, concealing her secret from her husband. The story is crowded with exciting scenes, including a train wreck.

Miss Walker has been on the stage since 1895. She toured with Richard Mansfield, had important parts with Marie Dressler, James A. Herne, James K. Hackett, Kyrle Bellew and E. H. Sothern.

She has starred in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," "Just a Wife," "Boots and Saddles," "The Warrens of Virginia," "The Wolf" and "The Two Virtues." Before joining Thanhouser her motion picture experience included starring engagements with Lasky and McClure.

HUTCHINSON IS IN LOS ANGELES

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American, Vogue and Signal companies, is now in Los Angeles, with the intention of spending the next six weeks on the coast, dividing his time between Los Angeles and Santa Barbara. It has been three months since Mr. Hutchinson was in the west.

WALLY VAN LEAVES "V"

Wally Van, for six years with the Vitagraph Company as leading comedian and then director, has severed his connections there, his future affiliations to be announced later. Mr. Van started with Vitagraph in comedy roles and played in scores of one, two and three-reel releases for the company. Later he was given his own comedy company and recently he was made a director of dramatic subjects. His last big work was "The Scarlet Runner," the Vitagraph serial.

Nine Weeks More Before "Witching Hour" Is Finished

Director Irving Is Not Handicapped by Time Limit in Production of Augustus Thomas Vehicle Featuring Jack Sherrill and Helen Ware

THE Frohman Amusement Corporation will require nine weeks more for their forthcoming production of Augustus Thomas' "The Witching Hour," says President William L. Sherrill.

In the cast of "The Witching Hour" are C. Aubrey Smith. Mr. Smith has assumed the role formerly played by John Mason. He is dividing his time between the studio and theatre, where he is rehearsing with Margaret Illington in her new play.

Jack Sherrill, who appeared in "Then I'll Come Back to You" and "The Conquest of Canaan," will be Clay Whipple in the Thomas play.

The role of Viola has been entrusted to Helen Arnold. Before giving her the part, which is one of the potent roles of the story, Director Irving subjected her to every imaginable test, both as to registering and acting ability.

Marie Shotwell, for many years a prominent figure on the speaking stage, plays the part of Helen, while Etta De Groff who appeared in "John Glayde's Honor" and "The Woman in 47," will play the part of the young mother, while Robert Conness plays Hardmuth.

George Melville will have a role somewhat similar to that he was seen in in "The Conquest of Canaan," while others of importance will have conspicuous parts.

Augustus Thomas, director general of the Charles Frohman enterprises, has been a regular visitor at the Frohman studio, where he went to pass judgment on the sets and scenes.

He announced himself as more than satisfied with the elaborate interiors and thoroughness of Director Irving's efforts to get out of the story everything in it.

Anthony Kelly is responsible for the scenario.

No limit has been placed on Director Irving. There will be no release date announced until the last inch of negative is developed, and then, following "Jaffery" and "The Conquest of Canaan," "The Witching Hour" will stand as a monument to Mr. Sherrill's statement, that working in a studio against the clock and a calendar, are detrimental to feature production in these days.

"The Conquest of Canaan" will be sold on a State rights basis. Sufficient inquiries have come in to justify Mr. Sherrill in his belief that an independent market of dependable substantiality exists and is worth appealing to.

No less than eleven hundred inquiries from exhibitors throughout the country have reached the Frohman offices.

Two men implicated in one of the biggest gambling raids in New York's history are working in the gambling house scenes in "The Witching Hour." One of these men, five years ago, paid as high as fifty thousand dollars a year for the privilege of running a rendezvous, and had John W. Gates, Fred Heinze and other millionaires for clients. He now earns about twenty-five dollars a week.

Jack Sherrill is a student of Professor Ellingon, a former assistant to Hugo Munsterberg. The professor is aiding Jack in the psychic scenes in "The Witching Hour."

The first showing of this picture will be given at Louisville, Ky., and Miss Arnold, a Kentuckian, will take the print of the picture there and be hostess to her friends at the first showing.

Pre-showing Gaumont's New Serial Evokes Praise

First Two Episodes of "The Vampires" Shown Exhibitors All Over Country Meets with Enthusiastic Reception

THE great success of "Fantomas" as the first three-reel series ever released in America will be more than duplicated by the next Gaumont three-reel series, "The Vampires," if the words of praise of exhibitors, who have had a foretaste of the series at Mutual Branches, can be taken as indicative of the general sentiment. The first two episodes are now being shown throughout the country that exhibitors may know exactly what they are to offer their patrons in booking "The Vampires" for nine weekly episodes.

Branch managers are writing the Gaumont Company in terms which indicate that "The Vampires" will duplicate the success with which it has met all over the world. It not only holds the record at the Palais Gaumont, Paris, but also at a number of English theatres and colonial amusement houses. The series is entirely new to America. The actors include some of the most popular screen artists of France.

Here follow some of the comments from Mutual Branch Managers; Atlanta—The verdict of exhibitors at the private preview was unanimous in favor of "The Vampires." They are just the kind of subjects exhibitors are looking for. Boston—"The Vampires" met with the approval of a large number of exhibitors who were present at the run-off. We look for a large amount of business on this series. Cleveland—We anticipate a greater volume of business even than on "Fantomas." New Orleans—"The Vampires" pleased exhibitors. Prospects look bright for the series in this territory. Pittsburgh—Exceptionally good, and will go over well in this territory. St. Louis—Exhibitors very well pleased. Washington—Impression is most favorable. Prospects are extremely bright.

Specially Composed Music for Kellermann Picture

Robert Hood Bowers Engaged to Write Complete Light Opera Score for "A Daughter of the Gods"

THE new art-form of film operetta will characterize the musical side of "A Daughter of the Gods" when produced by William Fox at the Lyric Theatre, October 17. Previous attempts to unite pictorial and musical motifs have ranged from the humble cue sheet of the ten-cent show to the selective score or the grand operatic experiment of some well-known composer for the first-class houses.

Robert Hood Bowers was engaged by Mr. Fox to write for the Kellermann fantasy with the same gay and frolicsome originality, if possible, as that he displayed in composing "The Vanderbilt Cup" or "The Rose Maid." The result is said to be a true film light opera in which the instrumental voices for the various characters take the place of human voices in speaking operetta, just as pictures take the place of the legitimate stage and its properties and people.

Robert Hood Bowers engaged yesterday thirty-five of the instrumentalists who have worked under him in recent light opera and musical comedy successes. Twenty-five more experts in this department will be hired within the week. Mr. Bowers consented to direct the first night in person, as well as the preliminary rehearsals. William Fox is in hopes that the composer will be able to cancel his other engagements so as to continue in the lead of the Lyric theatre orchestra throughout the run.

GOTTHOLD SIGNED FOR LEAD IN "THE CHALLENGE"

Charles Gotthold has been engaged by the Astra Film Corporation to play the male lead in A. H. Woods' play, "The Challenge," which is now being produced by Donald Mackenzie for the Pathe Gold Rooster Program. Mr. Gotthold was for a number of years associated with Henry Miller in the play, "The Great Divide." He also appeared with John Drew and Blanche Ring.

Mr. Gotthold inherits his dramatic talents from his parents. His father was a well-known player. It was on him that Booth leaned many times for support in trying and tragic roles. His mother played years ago in Woods' Museum in many notable productions.

CHANGE IN COLOR OF TAGS

Postmasters are being instructed by the Post Office Department to call attention to those patrons of the C. O. D. service who have their own tags printed, the change in color from red to light canary yellow, and the change in the arrangement and manner of printing on the face and the reverse sides.

NEW JUVENILE COMPANY FORMED IN FLORIDA

The Juvenile Feature Films Company is a new motion picture production company, organized in Jacksonville, Florida, with G. A. Walker, formerly with Pathe Company, as president. The company will use the Garrick Studios for the production of their pictures, and recently purchased the entire outfit of the Gaumont Company here. According to Mr. Walker, several well-known juvenile actors and actresses from New York have been secured, and work on the pictures will commence by October 15. The new company is capitalized for $25,000, all paid in, and has among its stockholders several well-known motion picture producers.

KATE PRICE NEW VIM STAR

Those who have followed the fortunes of Vitagraph and its stars from its early beginnings will remember Kate Price, the laugh-making star, who has twinkled for seven years in Vitagraph productions. She was recently signed on a long time contract with Vim productions by Mark Dintenfass and Louis Burstein, to star with "Babe" Hardy and Raymond McKee in Vim comedies, released on the General Film Service.

Kate Price (Vim Players)

Raymond McKee is another newcomer to the Vim staff with a record for ability. He was formerly with Lubin, then with the Edison Co. His last picture was with Emily Stevens in a Metro release.

The first picture in which the trio appear will be the Vim release of October 26, called "A Maid to Order."

MORENO OFF TO COAST TO STAR WITH STOREY

Within the next few days Antonio Moreno, Greater Vitagraph star, will be speeding across country to join Edith Storey at the western Vitagraph studio in Hollywood, California. This announcement coming so soon after Miss Storey's trip via Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Dallas and San Antonio has given life to a number of rumors which have been more or less garbled.

The facts are these: Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno and William Duncan are to be featured in a series of western stories under the direction of William Wolbert. The first release will be "Money Madness," a story by Hamlin Garland who has contributed several plots to the Vitagraph program. Much to the disappointment of the various Vitagraph V-L-S-E managers, Moreno will be unable to make stopovers or personal appearances in any of the theatres en route.

The Greater Vitagraph organization feels that it cannot spare Mr. Moreno for the time necessary to appear in person; also that it would be difficult to draw the line when requests from exhibitors would begin to come in for a particular portion of his time. Therefore they have arranged a schedule that will conserve every minute of his time from the hour of his finishing his last scene in Brooklyn to stepping into a set, prepared in advance at Hollywood.

The La Salle Motion Picture Company, with principal offices in Chicago, has begun the production of two-reel light comedies, having leased space at the Christie Film Company's plant. The production management is placed in charge of M. de la Parelle, who is well known in west coast film circles. Mr. de la Parelle was one of the organizers of the Masterpiece Film Company, and its first two subjects, "The Hoosier School Master" and "The Truth Wagon," each of five reels, were made under his direction.

Since his work in connection with Masterpiece he has been connected with the Keystone and other coast producing companies. The La Salle Company will release a two-reel comedy every two weeks through one of the organizations of the General Film Company. This week a stock company is being organized. The only player to be signed is Jean Otto.

BETTY BROWN POSES FOR MUTUAL FASHIONS

After a Summer vacation, during which she also rehearsed for a Broadway production, Betty Brown, the attractive Mutual model, is again posing in fashion scenes studios. Last season trunks of gowns were sent Miss Brown from New York while she was on the road with a Fashion Show vaudeville. These were accompanied by a maid from the establishment of a prominent Fifth Avenue modiste and a Gaumont cameraman.

Betty Brown in "The Girl from Brazil," in Gaumont-Mutual Fashion Pictures

There will be no occasion for so much traveling this season, since Miss Brown is in a successful musical comedy which bids fair to have a long run on Broadway. The production, in which she has a prominent part, is "The Girl from Brazil." She is seen on the screen the first time in many weeks in Mutual Weekly Number 91. In this picture she appears to advantage in some motoring costumes.

KOHN IS IN NEW YORK

Marion E. Kohn, president of the Consolidated Film Corporation, San Francisco, Cal., is in New York on a business trip, looking over the picture market with the intention of buying all better-than-program features he can secure. These he wants to supply the territory covered by his California exchanges.

Mr. Kohn, by way of a biographical introduction, quit the exporting and importing business five years ago and became associated with Sol Lesser. Later he was manager of the west coast branch of Warner's Features and after association with other film companies organized the Consolidated, backed by California bankers.

"RISE OF SUSAN" FOR DECEMBER RELEASE

Clara Kimball Young in "The Rise of Susan," is a World Film Corporation picture to be released early in December. This is an entirely new, regular program photoplay not in the special Clara Kimball Young service.

ELLIS PUTS FINISHING TOUCHES TO "MISSING HEIRESS"

Director Robert Ellis has put the finishing touches to "The Missing Hearess," sccond of the episodes of the new "Grant, Police Reporter" series. For the scenes in this episode requiring the use of ocean liners the director was fortunate in finding a number of German liners interned at Pensacola, Florida.

Captain Malitz, of the liner Trieste, obligingly put a crew of stokers to work and moved his vessel a half mile down the bay to give the director the scenes showing the liner putting out to sea. All the officers of the liner take part in the action of the photoplay and are anxiously awaiting the release of the picture to see themselves as screen actors.

Following the staging of the scene the Kalem compaany, headed by George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby, were guests of the officers at luncheon. It is in this episode that Dare-Devil Larkin, pursuing the liner in an aeroplane, makes a daring leap from the flyer to the ship's ladder.

"CIVILIZATION" LEAVES THE PARK THEATRE ON 300TH PERFORMANCE

"Civilization," the Thomas H. Ince $1,000,000 film spectacle which registers its three-hundredth performance at the Park theatre, Columbus Circle, on October 22, has by force of circumstances to leave that theatre the same night. It appears that a syndicate has opened negotiations for the acquisition of the New York State rights of the picture and wants to exploit it in their own way. They figure they can make more money out of the spectacle by showing it simultaneously in as great a number of places as possible, rather than by confining its presentation to one large theatre in a town. The negotiations have reached that stage where it is obligatory upon the present owners of the picture to close the run.

The syndicate will probably have 50 or 100 prints made.

There are approximately 2,000 exhibitors in New York State, the greater number of which will have the opportunity of showing "Civilization" to their patrons.

ADDITIONAL PRINTS READY FOR "THE GIRL FROM 'FRISCO"

The Kalem Company announces that steps have been taken to solve the troubles of exhibitors who have heretofore found difficulty in booking "The Girl from 'Frisco" series through the various General Film offices. Within the past week orders have been placed by all the branch exchanges for many additional prints on each episode beginning with the first, released many weeks ago.

In addition the cxchanges have placed standing orders for the increased number of prints for all future episodes of the series featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman. Exhibitors who found difficulty in booking the series in the early weeks of its release because of the overwhelming demands on the exchanges are now urged to place their orders as soon as possible to avoid further disappointment when the booking capacity of the additional prints is exhausted.

"The Land Just Over Yonder" from Unity on the 23d

Picture Is Based on a Story by Peter B. Kyne and Appeared Some Months Ago in the Saturday Evening Post

"THE Land Just Over Yonder," the first of the special features being produced by the Dudley Motion Picture Manufacturing Company, and distributed through the Unity Sales Corporation, will be released to exhibitors on October 23. The story from which the six reels of the picture have been made was written by Peter B. Kyne and appeared some months ago in The Saturday Evening Post. It is a tale of mining life in the great West and hinges for its action upon the absorbing devotion of an old man, whose heart is wrapped up in a young comrade and partner.

The young man becomes enamored of a quarter-breed woman, who not only breaks his heart through her unfaithfulness, but also runs away with his money, which has been wrung from mother earth through unceasing toil. Her lover is murdered and the young man is accused and, through the woman's treachery, is condemned to be executed.

The old man, in the meantime, having broken with his chum because of his infatuation with the woman, gives himself up to gambling and mining camp dissipations, loses his money and has to strike out into the wilderness again in search of more gold. Coming back at the end of some two years, he is elected sheriff of the county and discovers that he is to hang his former chum. Together they start for Carson City, where the old man goes before the governor and tells the story of "Billy Boys" life. The ring of genuine truth in the narrative convinces the governor of the young man's innocence and he is quickly pardoned.

The picture was filmed in the actual romantic setting of the story. George Chesebro is "Billy Boy," the young man, and the prospector is Arthur Millett. Jane Vernon is the intriguing quarter-breed. The other parts are in the hands of Elsa Fox, George Best, Julius Frankenberg and Charles Eichman.

This is the first of the Dudley features that will be released through the Unity Sales Corporation and it will be followed by other feature productions, one a month. For the present the Dudley Company will specialize in Peter B. Kyne's Western stories, which have appeared in The Saturday Evening Post. In November "Humanizing Mr. Winsby" is the one selected.

"Snow White" from Educational Films November 1st

"There Is a Strong Demand for Children's Pictures," Says Hammons, President of the Company—Juvenile Star Is Aimee Erlich

THE Educational Film Corporation of Seventh avenue, New York, will release about the first of November an adaptatioi of Grimm's fairy tale "Snow White," a special picture for children. More than four hundred children will be seen in the production. The picture will be released on the state rights basis.

E. W. Hammons, vice-president of the company, in speaking of this picture said, "I believe that there is a good, strong demand for children's pictures and Educational Films is going ahead and make the picture to fill this demand. In 'Snow White,' we believe we have a wonderful production, a picture that will appeal to the fathers and mothers and sisters and brothers as well as the children. No expense was spared in the production and the result is that we have a picture that not only contains an interestig story but is artistically beautiful as well.

"Aimee Erlich will have the title role in the picture. Though only a little girl she has had several years of stage experience and was selected for her beauty and dancing ability. She has a marked resemblance to Marguerite Clark and recently won the first prize as the child most like the famous actress.

"Others in the large cast of children are Ruth Richey, Eleanor Assmus, Sylvia Wunderlich, Pansy Grace Lichtenburg, Franklin Lovewell, June Harrison. The children were trained for three months before a crank was turned to take a scene. The group of fairies was trained by Eleanor T. Flinn. The picture was produced by the Regent Photoplay Company of Cleveland, under the direction of Charles H. Weston.

"We have endeavored to make this picture of the same quality, as fine in every respect as our regular scenics, which are well known throughout the industry. In the immediate future we will be able through an increase in production to release these scenics regularly one each week. The high standard of quality which has governed the pictures in the past will be maintained in every way and we will continue to show the most beautiful and most unusual of the scenic wonders of the world."

MOROSCO-PALLAS SIGNS HOUSE PETERS

House Peters has just signed a contract in New York with Morosco-Pallas and will accordingly again appear on the Paramount Program, where he has gained wide popularity in the past.

Under the Famous Players and Lasky brands, Mr. Peters became established as a screen actor of unusual dramatic ability. Among his most notable offerings are "The Bride of Jenico," "The Bishop's Carriage," "Chelsea 7750" and "An Hour Before Dawn."

Mr. Peters' motion picture career covers a period of some two and a half years, prior to which he appeared on the legitimate stage with considerable personal success. During this time he traveled in many parts of the globe, his greatest characterizations including those presented in "The Girl of the Golden West," "Warrens of Virginia," "Captive," "The Great Divide," "Closed Road" and other well known hits.

Mr. Peters has had no little success as a writer, many of his subjects having been produced on the screen.

GERALD GRIFFIN FOR METRO PRODUCTION

Gerald Griffin, known as "The Globe-trotting Actor," has been engaged for the important part of Rutherford, the candy king, in "The Sunbeam," the new Metro-Rolfe wonderplay in which Mabel Taliaferro will star. It was not decided to produce the picture until Mr. Griffin's services could be secured, as he is considered ideal for the exacting part of Rutherford.

He was born at Hanley, Staffordshire, England, of Irish parentage. His people came to America while he was still a boy, and settled in Pittsburgh. Later going to New York, he joined the company of Augustin Daly, and in the course of time became leading man with Ada Rehan. He became a stock favorite, playing all over New York in various stock companies. Plays with which he was identified were "The Cricket on the Hearth," "The Shaughran," "Marse Covington," and "Old Heidelberg." He played with the Charles Hoyt farces for two years, and was for seven years with Patti Rosa. Mr. Griffin is the original "Artie," that quaint character made known to the world by George Ade.

The actor's motion picture experience includes the leading role in "Feathertop," a Gaumont production, and "Blood Will Tell" for the Serial Film Co. Mr. Griffin has been all summer at one of his homes near Maranacook, Me., and returned to New York for the sole purpose of playing Rutherford in "The Sunbeam" with Miss Taliaferro.

"YELLOW MENACE" SOLD FOR SOUTH AMERICA AND INDIA

The Atlas Film Company closed negotiations during the past two weeks, whereby they acquired the rights to "The Yellow Menace" for South America and India, and has already begun its exploitation in these territories.

Numerous bids have been received for other foreign countries, but these are being held in abeyance until a disposition of the rights for England and the British dependencies has been made.

Aubrey M. Kennedy, who directed the picture for the Serial Film Company, is now in London arranging for the sale of the English rights. Mr. Kennedy cabled last week that he had just held a trade showing for English buyers. As soon as the arrangements are completed for the sale of the picture in England, other negotiations now pending for remaining territories will be closed.

The Unity Sales Corporation are also arranging for a representative in England to handle all of their releases, so that, with the arrangement already completed in this country for their distribution, they will have an efficient organization for the showing of their pictures throughout the world.

FEELY OF NEW YORK TO REPRESENT BUYERS

The activities of the firm of M. M. Feely & Company of 218 W. Forty-second street, New York City, who have been engaged in the feature distributing business for the past five years, are causing them to extend their present business operations to that of representing the out of town state right buyers in the reviewing of films and negotiating for their purchase.

The purpose of the company in opening this new branch is to save the state right buyers the loss of time and expense now entailed in their many unwarranted trips to New York, for the purpose of reviewing films that are generally unsuitable for their requirements.

The firm has now on their books the names of many of the largest state right buyers in the United States, Canada and Europe. This plan is evidently meeting with profound success from the expressions made by firms who they are representing, as it saves them both time and money. Mr. Feely's long service in the film business, both in producing, casting and selling should enable him to determine within a close degree of accuracy the market value of a feature picture.

LOVE STORY IN NEXT LEW FIELDS PICTURE

As a background for the humorous incidents of "The Man Who Stood Still," the first of the Lew Fields motion pictures for the World Film Corporation, there is a touching love story with the old jeweler's susceptible daughter and the unscrupulous son of his business rival as its principals. The daughter is played by Doris Kenyon, who is very pretty and quite young. Some of the most affecting scenes in this play, which blends fun with serious interest, are acted by Mr. Fields and Miss Kenyon. "The Man Who Stood Still" will be issued October 30.

MOVING PICTURE ROMANCE COMING BRADY PICTURE

William A. Brady has taken the movies as a topic for a motion picture which the World Film Corporation will issue during January. The photoplay is to be called "A Movie Romance," and Robert Warwick will have the star role.

VOGUE COMEDIENNE HAD LONG CAREER

Lillian Hamilton, the eighteen-year-old comedienne in Vogue pictures, has behind her a long career in picture work. She has been with Selig, Universal and Al Christie, playing both dramatic and comedy parts. In her childhood she played juvenile roles at Oliver Morosco's Burbank theatre in Los Angeles, Cal. None of the people interested in Miss Hamilton ordained her present career. She was to be a missionary, school teacher and a nun. But her inborn talent soon asserted itself and her present position speaks well for it.

SANGER COMPANY INCREASES OFFICE QUARTERS

The Sanger Picture Plays Corporation, of which Eugene B. Sanger is president, has taken a second suite of offices in Aeolian Hall to accommodate the increase in its staff. Other officers of the corporation are Brown Rolston, vice president, and Frederick Leake, secretary and treasurer. The studio building, one of the very few in the heart of the city, is located at Park avenue and 134th street and is now being rapidly equipped. Already Mr. Sanger has been negotiating with some of the best known writers in the country and his list of stars, when announced, will comprise well known actors and actresses.

LOEW BOOKS "THE PRIMA DONNA'S HUSBAND"

The Herald Film Corporation announces that both the Loew and Proctor circuits, after seeing "The Prima Donna's Husband," immediately booked the same for all their theatres. Arthur J. Abrams has been appointed the special representative for the Herald in Pennsylvania, and will make his headquarters in Philadelphia.

At the last meeting of the fire prevention committee of which Jesse L. Lasky is the chairman an executive committee was appointed with C. M. One of the most successful of the braneh meetings of the association was held last Wednesday, when the members of the supply and equipment group met with a number of non-members of the association for a get together conference. J. E. Brulatour acted as the chairman. J. A. Hallberg sounded the keynote of the meeting when he said, "Not theory but active aggressive work and a better understanding of the other fellow not in your line. Other addresses were made by Don J. ATLAS COMPANY INCREASES FORCE

The Atlas Educational Film Company, Pacific Building, San Francisco, has increased its traveling force out of this office, the new representative being A. W. Cowdin, formerly of the Los Angeles braneh, which was recently closed. With the opening of the public schools the business of this concern has shown a great increase, as it does most of its business with educational institutions.

David Horsley Resumes Production at Los Angeles

Two Companies Already at Work—Crane Wilbur to Continue Under the Direction of Thomas Ricketts, and George Ovey Under Milton H. Farney

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, Oct. 14.

DAVID HORSLEY has resumed production at his mammoth studio at Main and Washington street, Los Angeles. Mr. Horsley has been in the east for the past two months, and upon his return to the coast Sunday, he told the News representative his Los Angeles plant would take on greater activities within a few days than at any time in the past.

For the present but two companies were put to work. Crane Wilbur will continue as star of five-reel dramas made under the direction of Thomas Ricketts, producer of "Damaged Goods," "Purity," and other successful American features. The Wilbur subjects will be made in a series of six separate releases, each story separate so far as continuity and plot are concerned, but each one to a more or less extent connected with a general theme.

The second organization to be put to work was that of the Ovey-Farney Comedy Company. In the past several weeks, a series of twelve one-reel comedy scenarios have been prepared, and these will be made first. These, like the Wilbur subjects, will be of a series, while each subject is complete in itself.

Following the making of the twelve one-reelers, the company will take up the filming of a series of two-reelers. George Ovey will be the featured eomedian, and the direction as in the past, will be in charge of Milton H. Farney.

Concerning his plans with respeet to other companies, Mr. Horsley stated that at this time he could not make definite announcement. "I completed negotiations while in the east, which will make it possible for me to greatly inerease my output here, and at the same time, make it possible for me to put far more money into the pictures, thus assuring the releasing company and exhibitors as to the quality of the photoplays."

Within a few weeks, Mr. Horsley stated, he will have far more eompanies working at the studio than at any time since it was built.

Rosenbluh Formulates New Policy for Variety

Business Above Normal, He Declares, Commenting on the Success He Has Had with "My Country First" and "The Pursuing Vengeance"

THERE is at least one prophet of good times in the motion picture business, the same being President Louis Rosenbluh, of the Variety Films Corporation. During the past week Mr. Rosenbluh states that business has exceeded even its usual volume.

"My Country First" and "The Pursuing Vengeance," two of the features which Variety is putting out, have excited a great deal of interest among exhibitors. Both of these subjects were especially chosen by Mr. Rosenbluh on account of their money-making value to the exhibitor, and at a private exhibition of "My Country First," at which Sterling P. Story, director of the National Preparedness Bazaar, and a eommittee were present, the picture was recommended to the attention of the National authorities, as being worthy of forming the feature of the patriotic exhibition.

Excellent reports have also been received from exhibitors and exchange men throughout the New York and New Jersey territory, conecrning "The Pursuing Vengeance," another of Varicty's features, in which Sheldon Lewis is seen as the star. "The Pursuing Vengeance" based upon Burton E. Stevenson's novel, "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet."

In support of Mr. Lewis are seen Jane Meredith and Henry Mortimer.

Mr. Rosenbluh is authority for the statement that Variety is soon to announce some big plans. In fact, he admits that after several conferences Variety's new policy is practically complete, and that by the end of the current week he will be able to give full details of his intentions.

EXCHANGES OBTAIN BIG TAX REDUCTION

Exchange managers of New Orleans, who some months ago banded into an association for the purpose of fighting what they considered an onerous taxation on motion picture film by the city government, have won their fight. Curiously enough, the eity assessor some months ago assessed film exchanges in New Orleans, at the rate of $5 a foot. This made the average taxation on each New Orleans exchange about $50,000. By a recent decision of the court, this tax is reduced to an average of $9,000 per exchange.

"WAR'S WOMEN" IN OHIO

"War's Women," Thomas H. Ince's big screen success, is to be brought into Ohio by the States Film Company, Inc., 724 Columbia Building, an Ohio corporation in association with Mr. Ince himself.

INTERESTING CAREER OF BOY ACTOR

Percy Helton, the juvenile actor who impersonates Tom Judson, the evangelist's son in the International's Golden Eagle Feature, "The Flavor of Faith," is twenty-three years old and looks sixteen.

He has traveled five times across the continent, dodging in and out of New York before he reached his sixteenth year, to escape the Gerry Society. His first big part was Buster Brown which he assumed at the age of twelve. He was the only boy to play Buster, all of the others having been midgets. He played in W. A. Brady's "Lover's Lane" at the old Manhattan theatre the same year that "Floradora" was at the Casino. Then followed many engagements in melodrama from which he went to "Fifty Miles from Boston." After that he played with Louis Mann in "Julie Bon Bon," in which production Elsie Ferguson had a four line part.

Next he was in "The Wife Tamers" and after that three years with David Warfield in "The Return of Peter Grimm." Then he was in "The Madcap Duchess" and "The Miracle Man." His last big success was in the leading role in "Young America." He has appeared in but two motion pictures, "The Fairy and the Waif," as co-star with Mary Miles Minter and "The Flower of Faith," as co-star with Jane Grey and Frank Mills. His work in "The Flower of Faith" is considered the best he has ever done. As Tom Judson this remarkable boy actor has splendid opportunities to display the dramatic ability which seems to be part of his nature.

WARDE TO REMAIN IN PICTURES

Frederick Warde, the eminent Shakespercan actor, has canceled all his contracts for Lyceum work and lectures this year, and will devote himself exclusively to motion pictures. As soon as "The Vicar of Wakefield" is completed, the Thanhouser Company will make a big six-reel production of Mr. Warde in a modern subject, which is being specially written for him.

It will present the famous actor in a role foreign to anything that he has played for over twenty-five years, and is said to have been suggested by the story of "The Wandering Jew."

POSEN AND MILLSTEIN OPEN EXCHANGE

Of interest to local exhibitors is the announcement made by Al Posen and Robert Millstein that the Strand Film Service, the newest entry into the ranks of the film exchanges, has opened an office in the Gaiety Theatre Building, Broadway and Forty-sixth street, New York. Present plans call for the acquisition of a number of pictures which will be distributed according to a system which the new company has inaugurated.

COFFEY HEADS VICTOR IN BUFFALO

Harry C. Coffey, formerly of the Cincinnati Buckeye Film Exchange, has been appointed manager of the Victor Service, handling the Metro pictures in Buffalo. He will take up his new duties immediately.

"Civilization" Praised by Many Peace Societies

Thomas Ince Back at Culver City—Hints at Another Spectacle—Producer Is Pleased with Success of the Film in United States and Canada

The Ince Family Upon the Return of Thomas H. Ince to the West Coast

PREVIOUS to Thomas H. Ince's departure for the Pacific Coast last week he spoke at length on his latest big achievement "Civilization." Mr. Ince is more than pleased with the success it is meeting, both in New York City and other cities, where it is holding the screen. It has proven a vast argument for universal peace and many local and national peace societies have witnessed it since the beginning of its run in New York, and have afterwards sent letters or praise to its producer.

The success of the picture can easily be summed up by Mr. Ince's inborn ability to handle masses of people in production, and put them in a story of vital interest. Since his first big picture "The Battle of Gettysburg," he has turned out others of greater proportions. "Civilization" is the present climax in the tide of his production affairs, although he has already begun preparation for another offering of even larger scope.

Mr. Ince will not shed the slightest ray of light on the character of this forthcoming feature for professional reasons. In fact he has very few confidants in the matter. The time of its completion is of course unknown at present. Mr. Ince has gotten down to the work of supervising his weekly five-reel Triangle release since his return to Culver City. The first feature to be so run by this house was our "Carmen," for which they raised the admission price to twenty-five cents. The Victoria theatre in Victoria, has followed the policy of the Colonial, owing to the marked success of the new proposition.

"I have also taken up the matter with some of the members of the Canadian Parliament," he continued, "regarding the law they intend to enact in the Province of Quebec, with reference to the manufacturers making two sets of titles for their Canadian prints, one in French, the other in English. I have protested against the extra cost that this would entail and explained to them how hard it would be for the manufacturers to conform to a law of this kind. At the present time the large amount of duties and war taxes makes it quite expensive to introduce film into Canada, and I advised the gentlemen to whom I talked that if this law was passed, it would probably compel the American manufacturers to withdraw their releases from the Province of Quebec."

BRANDT COMES BACK TO NEW YORK TO CATCH UP ON SLEEP

"Sleep! Whaddya mean, sleep?"

Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal, fagged out by three weeks' day and night work on the Universal submarine spectacle, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," now packing them in at the Studebaker theatre, Chicago, disclaims all acquaintance with "Nature's sweet restorer."

Joe stepped off the Twentieth Century at Grand Central station on Monday morning, October 16, in wrinkled evening clothes and minus his first night opera hat, having "insomniaed" all the way from Chicago to New York.

"Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" is Joe's greatest triumph. The task of making it a success was put directly up to him by President Carl Laemmle and, judging from the encomiums of the Chicago newspaper critics, Joe made good with a vengeance.

"Greatest evening of cinema ever offered," says Fred McQuigg in the Chicago American; "Most unusual film yet produced," declares Bob McKnight in the Examiner; "Can be seen two or three times," asserts Louella O. Parsons in the Herald; "A big achievement," remarks W. K. Hollander in the News, and "Folks will love the story," says Kitty Kelly in the Tribune.

ARBUCKLE FORMS OWN PRODUCING COMPANY

Roscoe Arbuckle, Keystone comedian and director, is to leave Mack Sennett's organization when his present contract expires on the first of the year, according to a statement recently given out by himself. After January 1 he is to produce comedies for himself under the brand name of Comique. Al St. John, who has been appearing with Mr. Arbuckle in Keystone comedies for the last year, will be a member of the new company. No other players have yet been chosen.

While in New York City during last summer Mr. Arbuckle secured the interest of Joseph and Nicholas Schenk in his proposition and these two men, long prominent in theatricals, organized the Comique pictures with the comedian. No leading lady has as yet been decided upon, but Mr. Arbuckle hopes to secure one before long. He has also stated that his new company may take up the production of drama as well as comedy under his direction.

BALSHOFER ENGAGES LILLIAN HAYWARD FOR A METRO-YORKE SUBJECT

Lillian Hayward who makes her Metro debut with Harold Lockwood and May Allison in "Big Tremaine," has been engaged by Fred J. Balshofer to appear in a series of Yorke productions. Miss Hayward has earned a brilliant reputation for her fine dramatic characterizations and until recently was affiliated with the Selig California studio.

It was with the Selig studio, five years ago, that she made her first screen appearance. Previous to this she was a prominent member of the speaking stage.

It was due to Harold Lockwood's knowledge of her dramatic ability that caused General Manager Balshofer to send for Lillian Hayward. She played with him while the Yorke star was appearing in Selig dramas a few years ago, under the direction of Henry Otto, who is now staging these Metro productions.

MRS. VERNON CASTLE GROWS SIX INCHES

In one episode of "Patria," the preparedness serial of the International, Mrs. Vernon Castle, the star, impersonates two characters, "Patria" and "Mlle. Elaine," by the familiar process of the double exposure.

The most remarkable part of the picture, however, is the apparent difference in the height of the two figures, both impersonated by Mrs. Castle. The director who made the picture, admits that high-heeled shoes are responsible to a certain extent. He refuses, however, to account for the apparent difference of fully six inches.

GOEBEL CLOSES DEAL ON "CRIMSON STAIN MYSTERY"

O. E. Goebel, President of Consolidated Film Corporation, presenting "The Crimson Stain Mystery," the sixteen episode super-serial photoplay, consummated a deal with Henry J. Brock, of 1006 Candler Building, this week whereby Mr. Brock acquires the world rights exclusive of the United States, Canada, Australia and New Zealand, to "The Crimson Stain Mystery." The largest sum ever paid for serial motion picture rights is involved in this transaction.

Mr. Brock is known in the film trade as the largest world rights buyer. His purchase of Consolidated's first production is further proof of the box office value of "The Crimson Stain Mystery." Others to put the stamp of approval on this serial are Marcus Loew and Alex Pantages.

Following the closing of the deal, Mr. Brock told Mr. Goebel that already he has received inquiries from all over the world regarding the possible purchase of "The Crimson Stain Mystery."

BARTON TO DIRECT "PIDGIN ISLAND" FOR METRO

Steve Barton, well-known assistant director in the Los Angeles film colony, has been engaged by Fred J. Balshofer, general manager of the Metro-Yorke Film Corporation. Barton first went west with Fred J. Balshofer seven years ago, in the early days of the New York Motion Picture Company, when it was producing the Bison and 101 Miller Brothers Ranch pictures.

It was at this time that he was first introduced to motion pictures. Until recently he was prominently affiliated with Mack Sennett's Keystone studio. Barton will start work on the Metro-Yorke picturization of Harold MacGrath's "Pidgin Island," which presents Harold Lockwood and May Allison in the stellar roles. The latter co-starring team are still at work on "Big Tremaine," based on the novel of the same name by Marie Van Vorst, soon to be released on the Metro program.

MATRIMONY IS "REGISTERED" IN LOS ANGELES

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, October 15.

Matrimony has become epidemic in filmdom. On Friday and Saturday (pay-day at most studios) five prominent members of the screen world were wed.

On Friday Bessie Eyton, Selig star, went to Santa Barbara and there was wedded to Clark B. Coffey, insurance man of Vicksburg, Miss., whom she met there several months ago while playing in scenes for "The Crisis." Coffey came to Los Angeles two weeks ago. It is stated at the studio that Miss Eyton-Coffey will not give up her professional career.

James Kirkwood came to Los Angeles from Santa Barbara, where he is directing, and here met Gertrude Robinson, former well-known Biograph actress, and they were wed a few minutes later at the little brick parsonage just across the way from the Los Angeles courthouse.

On Saturday atfernoon also occurred the wedding of Hal. E. Roach, president and director-general of Rolin Film Company, and Margaret Nichols, who has been leading woman for one of the Rolin comedy companies for the past several weeks. Prior to this professional engagement Miss Nichols was featured in Balboa films.

Before joining the Vogue organization he served as director with the Lubin and Vim companies. He is now engaged in putting on comedies with Paddy McQuire as his leading light.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES AT DARTMOUTH COLLEGE

Never before in the history of the motion picture industry has there been an amusement institution that has, of necessity, drawn its entire clientele from a student body. Such, however, will be the case with the Nugget theatre, of Hanover, N. H., this year, which, when recently established, had the student body of Dartmouth College decide for the management what pictures it should run. More than eighty per cent of the students and professors requested Paramount pictures, and the Paramount Pictures Corporation has accepted the chair of advanced educational amusement for this institution.

The management will not only use the Paramount features, but all of its short reel subjects, the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, the Paramount-Burton Holmes-Travel Pictures, weekly trips around the world, the Paramount-Bray Cartoons and the Paramount comedies.

AUGUSTUS PHILLIPS JOINS METRO

Mr. Phillips was for five years with Edison, but since the first of the year has been a free lance, appearing in pictures for the Mirror Company with Nat C. Goodwin, for the Universal and other companies.

This actor is a product of the West. He was born in Rensselaer, Indiana, but spent several years on a far-Western ranch, living the life of a cowboy. He is an enthusiastic lover of horses, and refuses to own a poor horse.

Mr. Phillips' experience on the speaking stage includes stock work in Brooklyn and New York, the Fred Belasco stock company at the Alcazar, San Francisco, and the leading male roles in "The Continental Dragoon," "Betty," "The Small Town Girl," "Miss Ananias" and "The Wolf." SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"ATTA BOY'S LAST RACE"

(Fine Arts-Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

TOD BROWNING, author of "Atta Boy's Last Race," has utilized an old theme, melodramatic in structure, for the basis of his picture. In the last reel there is a race and Atta Boy runs. It is needless to say that a good deal depends on his winning, the money will pay off the mortgage on the old home, will rout the villain and the adventuress and cap a romance. And so Atta Boy wins and we have the completion of a fairly good picture. This time, however, the scenario is unsuccessful in smoothing over the worn parts of the story. True, here the horse is not doped, the substitute incident being an attempt to "pocket" it in the race, but what after all is the difference? Careful consideration on the point also leads us to the conclusion that the footage is too much for the story to bear.

The Lovers Secure the Horse

George Siegmann has produced the picture in a realistic way. The numerous race scenes must even appeal to the professional horseman.

Around Dorothy Gish revolve most of the scenes, and this is the big point in favor of the picture. Whatever Miss Gish does she does well, and in some places here she puts her scenes over to such a delightful extent that one is inclined to forget they are merely so much fattening. Keith Armour is rather a negative hero, but the fault lies chiefly with the part and not with the actor. Carl Stockdale is the villain, suave and plotting. Others are Adele Clifton, Loyola O'Connor, Fred Turner, Tom Wilson and Joe Neery.

With all its familiar melodramatic structure, the polish that is always connected with Fine Arts pictures clings to "Atta Boy's Last Race," so that while crude in essentials such is not the case on the surface. But its length prevents it from edging into the class of real features.

"THE MISSING HEIRESS"

(Kalem-General—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY THEODORE OSBORN ELTONHEAD

THE second episode of the series under the general title of "Grant, Police Reporter," featuring George Larkin, contains an exceedingly hazardous piece of business, in which a close-up is taken of a flying aeroplane. This necessitated the use of two machines flying together in the air only twenty feet apart. To any one familiar with aeronautics the danger of this accomplishment is evident.

The story is thoroughly interesting. The daughter of a wealthy man is kidnapped. The only clue is a letter demanding ransom. Grant, by a clever bit of detecting brings the crime home to the secretary and butler of the millionaire. They receive word in time, however, and the butler escapes with the girl to an outgoing ocean liner. As soon as Grant receives word by wireless that they have arrived on board he obtains an aeroplane and sets out in pursuit, rescuing the girl from the ship far out at sea.

Ollie Kirkby pleases in the leading role of the young girl while George Larkin as the police reporter is most capable throughout. Others in the cast are Robert Ellis, William McKey, Betty Dial, G. Chira, and Arthur Albertson.

"WITCHCRAFT"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY THEODORE OSBORN ELTONHEAD

"WITCHCRAFT" is a thoroughly delightful picture in every particular and as such will not fail in pleasing any audience that is so fortunate as to witness it. It is a picture that has an almost universal appeal, containing as it does a good clean wholesome story, most excellently acted and produced. It is a picture that exhibitors can feel the greatest confidence in advertising extensively, for it is sure to please. Fannie Ward in the leading role is a delight, presenting a series of charming scenes that are a distinct pleasure to witness. The story was written by R.

True Boardman, Marin Sais and Frank Jonasson Furnish Some Thrills for the "Harvest of Gold," Twelfth of Kalem's "Girl from 'Frisco" Series

Ralston Reed, and the picture produced under the direction of Frank Reicher.

The picture is merely a series of incidents in the life of one of the early New England colonies in the days when witchcraft was a recognized evil. Suzette and her mother, Hugenot refugees, are forced to leave the French colony because her mother, who is suffering from some form of epilepsy, is looked upon as a witch. They take refuge in a Pilgrim colony, but because they call in an Indian, Nokomis, who is said to be a witch, the mother again falls under suspicion.

In order to protect her, Suzette is forced to marry Makepeace Struble, the town miser, although she is in love with his nephew, Richard Wayne. Later the mother dies and Struble treats his young wife with great cruelty. On his death bed he accuses her of being a witch. From Nokomis, Suzette has learned that the Indians plan a raid and hurries off to Boston to apprise Richard Wayne, who, being on the governor's staff, saves the settlement. Later Suzette is tried as a witch and sentenced to be hung. Word reaches Wayne in time and he is instrumental in having the governor make a proclamation abolishing witchcraft. He arrives just as the rope is about to be placed around Suzette's neck and places his arms there instead.

Frank Reicher has given the picture a most effective production. His locations were particularly well selected and his settings were accurate as to place and period. Too much praise cannot be given Miss Ward for her delightfully effective acting. Every minute that she was in evidence she pleased. Others in the cast were Jack Dean, Paul Weigle, and Lillian Leighton. The lighting and photography were up to the usual Lasky standard.

"JIM GRIMSBY'S BOY"

(Triangle-Ince—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

FRANK KEENAN, a superb production in which faultless photography prevails and a story with a heart interest theme manage to put "Jim Grimsby's Boy" over. Judging it by previous pictures in which Mr. Keenan is starred, it is lacking in full strength and while there is a big element of dramatic conflict, it is not of the serious, thrilling type that makes an audience grip the several arms of its chairs. The gorgeous scenery and the excellent "shots" of the cameraman help the subject along to a great extent.

Jim Grimsby, a mountaineer-miner, has brought his girl up as a boy because he hates anything relative to the eternal feminine. He goes so far to damn them all in one subtitle. Bill, as he calls his daughter, endures for a while, but finally the prerogatives of her sex assert themselves. She wants to dress as a woman and moreover she wants to go to school. Waldo, the sheriff, a man Jim believes a bluffer, takes an interest in the girl and inspires her with a still greater desire for learning. Jim, to see what stuff the sheriff is made of, goes to town and robs the gambling joint and much to his surprise Waldo comes after him. This seems to convince him that Waldo's ideas on education are all right and so the girl has her wish granted.

Grace Kingsley and Seymore Tally Visit the Metro-Yorke Studio

The love story of the girl and Waldo never gets beyond the love at first sight stage. We think it would have been better if it had been developed further. The picture just needs a bigger love element to furnish the finishing touch. The conflict between the girl and her father is not quite big enough to carry the picture alone.

Enid Markey does some effective work as the girl. Others are Robert McKim, Fanny Midgley and E. P. Lockney.

"THE SCARLET OATH"

(Peerless-World—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY THEODORE OSBORN ELTONHEAD

"THE Scarlet Oath" falls in the class of what is known as twin sister stories, in which one sister assumes the identity of the other in order that the intricate tangle of the plot may be effectually unwoven. There is this much to be said of it however, that it is a mighty good story of its class, well conceived and well worked out. The original story was written by Frederic Kulz and was put in scenario form by Gardner Hunting, who has achieved a good piece of continuity writing.

The dual role of the twin sisters was creditably handled by Gail Kane. There are only one or two places where double exposure photography is necessary to show the two sisters at once. Miss Kane has interpreted the widely opposed characters of the two girls in a most efficient manner, the lighthearted, frivolous nature of Nina, the pampered society girl, and the brooding revengefulness of Olga, brought up and educated in Nihilistic circles with the one idea of revenge and murder as her sole object in life.

The story tells of the Nihilist, Pavloff, exiled from Russia, who comes to this country with his twin baby daughters. On the steamer a lonely wealthy Russian couple, the Karenin's, try to persuade him to let them adopt Nina. He refuses but later, being reduced to dire want, is forced to consent. Karenin gives him a large check to be used for Olga's education.

Years later Pavloff has achieved great success as a revolutionary writer and has become the leader of the nihilists in America. He receives word that Savaroff, who caused the death of his wife, has become chief of the dreaded Russian third section. He and Olga take a solemn oath to bring about Savaroff's death. They journey to Warsaw secretly and at a meeting of the nihilists are captured. Olga, in order to save her father from death by torture, consents to remain with Savaroff in his house for one night. While there she learns that her father has died and as a result kills Savaroff. Escaping, she is mistaken by John Huntington, her sister's fiancee, for her sister. Masquerading as his wife, the two escape from Russia and safely reach America. There Olga is shot by Russian spies and Huntington learns of his mistake when Nina, his real fiancee, suddenly appears on the scene.

The picture was staged under the direction of Frank Powell and Travers Vale and for the most was acceptable. The Russian scenes lack realism, however, and there is little that suggests the Russian atmosphere. Allan Hale failed to please to any great extent as John Huntington. Others in the cast are Philip Hahn as Ivan Pavloff, Carleton Macey as Victor Karenin, Lillian Page as Mrs. Karenin, Boris Korlin as Gaganov the leader of the nihilists, and Montagu Love as Nicholas Savaroff. The lighting and photography were up to standard.

Beautiful Exteriors as Backgrounds for Bluebird's "The End of the Rainbow," Featuring Val Paul, Jack Curtis, Joe Ryan and Myrtle Gonzalez

"LIFE'S SHADOWS"

(Columbia-Metro—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

FOR a true life portrayal commend me to this latest product from the Columbia Pictures Corporation for the Metro program. The title, "Life's Shadows," would seem to designate it as a rather sombre, sorrowful number, but on the contrary it sparkles with bright spots, not alone in the comedy situations, of which there are quite a few, but in the true depiction of rural life in which joy and pathos are cleverly intermingled.

The story by William Nigh deals with the little town of Purity and its struggles to live up to its name. The village gossip, the teetotalers, and the "by heck" politicians are all in evidence and a spirited mayoralty election which a "dark horse" wins furnishes the main theme.

Lawyer Bradley, who loves his cups, has befriended a woman and made her his housekeeper in spite of the town's disapproval. Another unfortunate turned down by the town censors is also taken under his wing. The latter has been wronged by the older of two sons of the town's leading citizen, Hugh Thorndyke, a distiller. The son Rodney is nominated for mayor and at Bradley's suggestion rights the wrong done the girl, to insure his election. the girl, Madge, is recognized by a professional gambler who comes to town. With the help of Bradley who comes to her rescue during a terrific struggle between herself and the gambler for the possession of an incriminating photograph, she secures the photograph and gives it to Rodney.

Chester Thorndyke, the younger, is also addicted to drink but turns over a new leaf and the two candidates being, for sufficiently evident reasons, compelled to leave town, he accepts the nomination and is unanimously elected mayor.

The story runs along smoothly and a thoroughly capable cast makes the most of its opportunities. The photography is beyond criticism and the whole makes a desirable and creditable number.

Irene Howley as Madge, and William Nigh who directed the piece and played Bradley both deserve special mention, while Roy Clair did justice to the part of Chester.

THREE SPLIT REEL CARTOONS

(Keen Kartoon Korporation)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THREE animated cartoon comedies drawn by different artists will be released by the Keen Kartoon Korporation, beginning the first week in November. It is the plan of the company to release one a week. The three shown for review offer fairly humorous stories, the best of the lot being "Easy Money."

In this, which was drawn by H. M. Frenck, an Irishman takes out an accident policy and immediately gets into several accidents on which he collects. His wife has visions of a new hat to cost fifty dollars and by the gentle use of tact she persuades her husband to fight a man, whom she believes is more than his match. But it is quite the contrary and the husband comes home victorious. This is so arranged as to create a good surprise at the end which has the added attraction of being funny.

"Henry W. Zippy" is another, drawn by Charles E. Howell. The husband buys a motor boat and his wife, believing him incapable of running it, ties it to the dock with a long rope. Henry gets far out on the water before the rope gives out and then believing the engine is stalled he is obliged to swim home. "Slinky, the Yegg," pictures in a fairly amusing manner the way in which a yegg blows a safe, escapes from a policeman and a dog but later falls afoul of the policeman. This was done by Lee Connor.

All three of these artists are unused to motion picture cartoon work. Their work, while for the most part cleverly conceived, is jerky and somewhat slow in animation. Perhaps a little more experience and they will be able to produce good pictures from the technical as well as the artists' standpoint.

"MUTT AND JEFF" AND "HANS AND FRITZ"

(Mutt and Jeff Films—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

BUD FISHER'S creations are great laugh creators and when shown in animated form are always bound to please. In this number from the Mutt and Jeff Film laboratories, the agile pen of Mr. Fisher shows Mutt and Jeff as war correspondents off for the battle fields of Mexico, their arrival and subsequent adventures. After their notice of appointment is received Mutt and Jeff leave for the border and the moving train is cleverly depicted as is their arrival at El Paso and also their welcome by General Pershing.

Mutt sits down at his trusty typewriter and pounds away at Jeff's dictation. Their first message from the front is a lament on the lack of excitement, no battle in sight and a general lassitude seemingly over everything. Just as the last few words are being written a band of Mexicans start shooting and the last we see of Mutt and Jeff is Mutt pounding out the last of the message while on the dead run with Jeff leading the way.

In the Hans and Fritz cartoon the Katzenjammer Kids take a bottle of medicine from the Captain's grip and get a couple of ostriches to gobble it up. The birds get drunk from the stuff that was originally intended for the cold of the King. Clever work on the part of the cartoonist results in many laughable situations at the antics of the kids and the two intoxicated birds.

Both the cartoon comedies are good numbers.

"IT MAY BE YOUR DAUGHTER"

(Moral Uplift Society—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY LESLEY MASON

MOST exhibitors and, probably, the majority of theatregoers would put this down as what is commonly called a "white slave picture."

That is only partially true, but it is true enough to keep any exhibitor from booking it who does not want pictures that deal with the social evil. It is only partially true to call "It May Be Your Daughter" a "white slave" film, because an analysis of the picture will show the amount of "white slave" atmosphere and elements in it to be really superficial and incidental.

There is no attempt to do or to show things that never have been done or shown before in such pictures. Quite the contrary. The makers have wisely refrained from delineating many things that have characterized other "white slave" pictures of this and other seasons, without weakening the story or its lesson.

But after all, the avowed object of the picture is to teach a lesson on "the blindness of innocence," generally exhibited in young girls, and its appeal is confined to exhibitors and audiences who want such stories.

Considering the picture from this standpoint, it will undoubtedly make as much money for the exhibitor who books it as any subject of the same length and on the same theme that has been released. The story though weak in spots, is clearly and swiftly told, with plenty of action and no digression. The cast is almost uniformly good, with here and there a tendency to exaggerated action.

This, however, is as much the fault of the melodramatic demands of the story as the disposition of the actors. The photography is excellent, the interiors unpretentious but carefully done, and all of the exteriors effective.

The picture is developed by the "story within a story" method. A young girl, who has quarreled with her mother and left home on account of a flirtation with a street acquaintance is rescued from the disguised cadet by a minister in charge of a settlement house. He brings the girl to his associate, Ruth Thompson, the woman whose marriage to him was prevented by the tragedy of her own life.

To show the girl the error of her conduct, the elder woman tells her own story. This is the major part of the picture. Ruth and her mother were saved from a worthless father's murderous anger by a clergyman and she as a baby was adopted by the minister. A scar remains on the child's neck. Years after the father, released from prison and ignorant of his daughter's whereabouts, plots to revenge himself on the clergyman by kidnapping his daughter. Salvatore, the father, is now a prosperous man living on the proceeds of disorderly houses which he maintains.

The abduction is successful. In the meantime Salvatore's chauffeur has enticed to the same house a girl associate of the heroine, and she, discovering Ruth in the den, makes her escape and brings the girl's adopted father, the curate to whom she is engaged, and a squad of policemen on the scene in the nick of time.

They break down the door of the room where Ruth is confined as Salvatore is about to attack her and the police captain's words, "She is your own daughter!" are followed by a bullet from the captain's pistol through the man's brain. To atone for her father's sins Ruth renounces her betrothal to devote her life to the rescue and assistance of erring and ignorant girls.

"IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE"

(Quality-Metro—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

THE popular combination of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne is always a winner from a box office standpoint and with "In the Diplomatic Service" for a vehicle they ride further on the road to popularity.

The story by John C. Clymer and Hamilton Smith was adapted and directed by Francis X. Bushman, who also plays the lead.

At the instigation of his uncle, who is head of the secret service in Washington, Dick Stansbury (Francis X. Bushman) takes upon himself to get sufficient evidence to convict the hithertofore elusive Doctor Montell, who has proved a thorn in the side of the U. S. Diplomatic service.

The doctor being on guard at all times and knowing all the secret service men on sight up to now eluded all their efforts to catch him with the goods.

Dick, posing as the inventor of an aerial gun that will revolutionize warfare as far as attacks from the air are concerned, gets the doctor interested. Taking what is supposed to be a working model of the gun to a week-end with him he meets the doctor who he knew would be there.

The doctor falls for the bait and tries to get Dick to sell his invention to the country that he represents. Connecting up the model with an electric current Dick captures Montell and his accomplices as they steal into his room and try to carry off the model.

There is not a lagging moment throughout the entire five reels and good acting and photography only help to enhance the exceptionally interesting plot.

Beverly Bayne as the daughter of the hostess where the week-end party is held has only a small part but needless to remark she does it credit.

Others in the cast deserving of special mention are Belle Bruce as Beverly's chum, William Davidson as her admirer, Henri Bergman as the doctor and Charles Fang as Dick's valet.

This release of Metro's is a thoroughly desirable number.

TOLEDO, OHIO September 27th, 1916.

Mr. William Fox,
President, Fox Film Corporation,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

You will be pleased to hear no doubt, that Fox Features are meeting with unusual success in the City of Toledo. This has been proven by the steadily increasing patronage that the Temple Theatre is enjoying at the present time. We are frank to admit that Fox Features have played a very great part in determining the success of this venture. We therefore recall with keen gratification the unanimous verdict of the showmen of the middle west that the Temple Theatre was an impossible proposition and never could be "put over" successfully.

We therefore feel that you, in a measure, should share our prosperity and we voluntarily increase the price of our service fifty dollars per week to take effect immediately.

Wishing you continued success which means our success, we are,

Yours very truly,
Edward A. Zorn Manager
PEOPLES AMUSEMENT COMPANY.

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM SERVICE

"Near to Earth." (Biograph. Reissue.)—An Italian romance produced by D. W. Griffith and featuring Gertrude Bambrick, Walter Miller, Robert Harron and Lionel Barrymore. The story is a simple affair, but some excellent scenes offset by superb photographic work put it in the class of the best one-reelers. And this despite the fact that it was made two years ago.

"Lord Chumley." (Biograph. Reissue. Three reels.)—This picturization of the play that has long been connected with the name of E. H. Sothern was produced for Biograph by James Kirkwood and presents a cast containing such prominent names as Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Walter Miller, Mary Alden and Charles H. Mailes. The play has been screened with average results. There is nothing exciting about the story and sometimes it moves at a rather slow pace. Mr. Walthall in the title role does efficient work.

"The Lost Messenger." (Kalem. Sat., Oct. 28.)—Another episode in the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series, which pleases on account of its thrills. Helen in order to escape a gang of thieves is forced to drop from a high draw bridge into the river, and an express messenger makes a mighty good fall from a moving train as it is crossing the same bridge into the river many feet below. The story is slight, but serves its purpose in providing these two thrills, both of which are quite worth while.

"The Bogus Booking Agents." (Kalem. Tues., Oct. 24.)—Ham and Bud in this single-reel comedy get into all kinds of trouble when they masquerade as theatrical booking agents. Their adventures are numerous as usual, but most of the humor is supposed to result as they are chased up and down innumerable flights of stairs.

"The Harvest of Gold." (Kalem. Episode 12, "The Girl from 'Frisco." Wed., Oct. 25. Two reels.)—There is not as much action in this episode as has characterized some of the others, but this is somewhat compensated for in the beautiful settings taken in the orange groves of California. The story of Robert Welles Ritchie tells of an attempt of the Fruit Syndicate to corner the orange crop, and the manner in which they are frustrated by Barbara's father and John Wallace, who are the largest growers in the state. The syndicate in revenge tries to blow up their irrigation pipes, but is prevented by the quick action of Barbara, who seizes the charge of dynamite, just as it is about to explode and hurls it off to a safe distance. The photography and lighting were up to standard. The cast includes besides Marin Sais and True Boardman, Frank Jonasson, Ronald Bradbury, Edward Clisbee and Hart Hoxie.

"Trouble for Four." (Vitagraph. Mon., Oct. 23.)—This is a pleasing domestic comedy in which Mr. Newlywed, attempting to straighten out the affairs of a bachelor friend gets accused of flirting by his wife. Written by Edward J. Montagne, this story is excellently constructed, and contains a wealth of fine comedy situations. John Robertson directed.

"Betty's Affair." (Vitagraph. Fri., Oct. 27.)—The old comedy in which father's ideas for his daughter's husband don't jibe with those of the daughter herself is produced here varied with a few situations that are different. Her choice gets into the kitchen as cook and his art in this line doesn't appeal in the least to the fellow at the table. The leading parts are well handled.

"A Persistent Wooing." (Vim. Tues., Oct. 18.)—Rosemary Thehy and Harry Myers are featured in this single-reel comedy, which, though having a trite story, has been exceedingly well produced and directed. The sub-titles deserve especial commendation, some of them being more amusing than much of the action. A young girl falls in love with a young man, who is already engaged to another girl. She does not allow this little thing to stop her, however, and by causing the bridegroom to be late for the ceremony breaks up the wedding. He then decides that he had better marry her after all, and the picture closes to the usual happy ending.

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

"Luke—Chauffer." (Rolin.)—A wild sort of comedy in which a fortune hunter marries a fat widow believing her to be an heiress—but she isn't. Luke figures in an incidental role of a chauffer. His machine is all decorated up like wash day and the tricks it is made to perform are original as well as humorous. While Luke, himself is not given his usual supply of opportunities the picture gets over much better than the average comedy.

"Betty Entertains an Out-of-Town Guest." (Florence Rose Fashions. No. 7.)—Miss Rose displays a varied asortment of women's fashions in this reel, which is fully up the standard of her previous releases.

"The Shielding Shadow." (Astra. Two Reels. Sixth Episode.)—The mystic powers of Ravengar are much in the fore in this number of the serial entitled "The Disappearing Prisoner." Although a captive of the Queen of the Underworld's gang, Ravengar manages to release himself temporarily and saves Leontine from death at the hands of gypsies who have been bribed by the gang. Later he is discovered still a prisoner of the underworld. There is much melodramatic action in this and the interest is further heightened as to the wonderful discovery of Ravengar.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Society Hypocrites." (Special U. Three reels. Tues., Oct. 24.)—In which an Indian, the last of his race, on being introduced into modern society finds it all wrong, shallow and hypocritical. While Ben Wilson does some fine work in this as the Indian it has not been produced in expert fashion. The details of the action are not well brought out, the flash back is constantly overworked and the story moves rather slowly throughout. The scenario was done by the Willis-Woods collaboration while a cast of many members lends support to Wilson.

"The Bar Fly." (Nestor. Mon., Oct. 23.)—An excellent comedy by Virginia Kirtley is presented here and although quite familiar in all its details due to past Nestors it well bears repeating. The husband resolves to go to the ball as a tramp. His wife mistakes a real tramp for her husband and this gentleman promptly disgraces the family name by lapping up all the drinks in sight. With Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean in the principal roles this comedy is assured of success.

"Through Solid Walls." (Imp. Two reels. Fri., Oct. 27.)—A well written mystery story in which an invention by which the opaque becomes transparent, proves of value in running to earth two crooks. It is a thoroughly interesting picture, the suspense is well sustained and the action well arranged. Thomas Jefferson, Irene Hunt, Marc Fenton, Jay Belasco and Peggy Custer are the principals. Tarleton Winchester did the story, E. J. Clawson the scenario and Walter Morton directed.

"A Pair of Shadows." (Big U. Mon., Oct. 9.)—A good comedy idea forms the basis of this picture which shines through the surface despite a somewhat careless production. The husband and wife are both jealous and each engages a detective of the opposite sex to look after the other. The complications that arise throughout the rest of the reel offer very good comedy. Fritzi Brunette is featured.

"A Crooked Mixup." (Joker. Sat., Oct. 28.)—Here we have the story of the husband who wants to throw a scare into his wife and so engages an actor to dress up as a burglar and rob his house. The wife finds out and treats the burglar with every respect when he arrives but the trouble is that the actor doesn't get there until after a real thief has done his work. The fun after this is mostly knockabout slapstick and although laughable it is overdone. The usual Joker cast appears. Charles J. Wilson, Jr., wrote the scenario.

"The Moving Finger." (Rex. Sun., Oct. 29.)—Written by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude, this picture shows the manner in which the family doctor by a clever ruse prevented the wife from eloping with another man. Though conventional in theme, the treatment accorded this story is original and pleasing from start to finish. E. P. Evers, Maude George, Paul Byron and Lee Hill are the leads.

"A Rural Romance." (L-Ko. Two reels. Wed., Oct. 26.)—A good comedy number staged on a farm where the farmer to cancel his mortgage agrees to marry his daughter to his creditor's son. Daughter, however, has different plans and a wild elopement with one of the hands ends the laughter. The gags and trick work introduced in this are unusually good, chief among them being the rapping up of the creditor's son in a bale of hay. The cast is accomplished, though not popularly known.

"The Narrow Creed." (Big U. Two reels. Thurs., Oct. 25.)—A very good drama of its kind, attacking the bigotry and narrowness of a small village. The personal interest is strong and the story powerful. Murdock MacQuarrie, as the doctor, the only broad minded man in the village, gives one of the excellent characterizations for which he is noted. Millard K. Wilson and Edythe Sterling are the wayward lovers and Will Rodgers the deacon. Jay Hunt directed from a scenario by Ben Cohn.

EXHIBITOR PERSONALS

Dr. C. G. Brown has sold the Crystal theatre to E. Miller of Muskogee, who is a new man to the business.

Marceline: Jack Lovely will open the Ripley theatre soon.

Altamont: Wilder and Son, hardware merchants, have equipped part of the building they own for a moving picture theatre and have opened one there.

E. St. Louis: A new motion picture theatre is being contemplated on Collinsville avenue, at numbers 209-11-13, on which site a forty-day option has been taken by Percy Knoebel. An option of several weeks' duration on the property at 211-13 had expired just an hour before the one taken by Knoebel. The first option had been granted to Frank R. Tate, a well-known theatrical manager of St. Louis, but number 209, which was next to an alley, could not be obtained, and the option was allowed to expire. The location is peculiarly adapted for theatrical purposes, as it is in a central and busy section, and is easily reached from all parts of the city.

KENTUCKY—Guthrie: Nettie Dark is proprietor of the Nelda theatre. Claude Kimbrough, the operator, runs the show.

Mount Stirling: Marvin Gay is manager of the Paramount, the only white theatre in town. Tauf & Wilkerson run the McGowan theatre, a colored playhouse.

LOUISIANA—Ruston: There are two theatres here—the Astor, run by Louis Astor, and the Princess.

MAINE—West Peru: Since the Pavilion burned no motion pictures have been shown here.

MARYLAND—Frederick: W. L. O. Fisher of the Star is doing a good business; he is an expert musician. F. Lester Smith, manager, and Lewis Woodard, operator, of the City Opera House, are two hustlers; Mr. Woodard is an expert electrician.

Taneytown: H. C. Boyer, the genial proprietor of the House of Amusement, has a newly-equipped and centrally located theatre. Is giving a good show, of new film, and crowded houses attest the satisfaction of his audiences.

Williamsport: The Pythian Opera House is out of business. There are two new motion picture houses run respectively by A. O. Murry and W. O. Bowser.

MASSACHUSETTS—Amherst: Lawler Bros. of Greenfield lease the town hall here for motion pictures.

Maynard: The Co-operative Hall is closed.

Oxford: Wm. Taft now has the Memorial Hall motion picture show in his circuit.

Wareham: W. E. C. Warr is owner and manager of the Warr and the Colonial (at Onset). The Pastime is at Wareham and the New Onset (at Onset). The Gem theatre is not running.

MICHIGAN—Lansing: Motion picture theatres appear to be flourishing. There are in the field the following: Bijou, W. S. Butterfield; Colonial, Wilson & Cady; Garden and Orpheum, Jarvis Theatre Co.; Gladmere (formerly Baird's Opera House), Williams & Stahl; Majestic; Metropole, Waltersdorf & McLaughlin; Orient; Plaza, W. THE SHIELD OF KNOWLEDGE

Perhaps your daughter has been taught the lesson which all girls should be taught by their mothers. Perhaps not.

Possibly you are one of those mothers who think that life should not be talked over.

Your daughter faces the world improperly fortified against the temptations with which she will be surrounded.

Ignorance is danger. You trust to her natural instinct to do right. But a stronger will than hers may break down such barriers.

The greater the lack of knowledge, the greater the dependence your daughter will place in those who profess friendship.

She loves to please the one who may be looked up to by her as the acme of all that is good and great and honorable.

Promises are looked upon as binding as signed documents.

Give your daughter the knowledge which is a strong shield in time of temptation.

But the danger of forbidden paths does not present itself until the awakened conscience begins to sting.

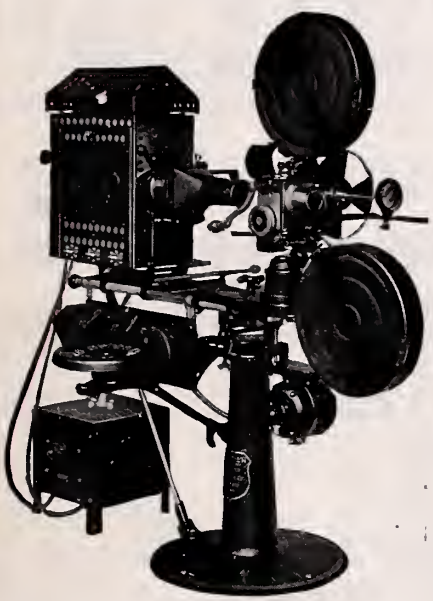
THE MOTIOGRAPH

It Answers "Yes" to Every Question



Write for Literature.

It is of vital importance that you ask such questions as the following when buying a projector.

Is The Best Material Used?

The Lamphouse is made of High Grade Planished Steel—Castings from best grade gray iron—Bushings of the best journal bronze—Star and Cam of high grade crucible tool steel.

Is It Safe?

Ask any user or operator of the MOTIOGAPH, he will soon answer your question in regard to Safety.

What About Simplicity?

Easy to thread—Simple oiling system. Framing Device easily removed. All parts interchangeable. Adjustments where necessary.

Does It Give Satisfaction?

Mr. H. D. Graham, Manager of The New Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., says, "It is the opinion of everyone that we are getting the best projection in the city with the new Motiograph, which we consider superior to any other machine on the market."

Is It Economical?

With our Year's Guarantee on the machine and the best material used in every part of the projector, your up-keep is reduced to the minimum —and think of it, first cost only $250.00 for hand-drive and $285.00 for motor-drive.

Making Good

LAST week we took up the equipment of the projection room, trying to point out that in order to have the pictures make good on the screen it is necessary first to have a competent operator, and second to give the operator the tools to work with.

Granted that this has been done—it is strange to see how many picture theatre owners seem to start right in placing obstacles in the way of the operator. They seem to think that because all possible equipment has been installed there is no need of further attention and that the operator should be stumped at nothing.

AS an illustration of this the accompanying cut brings out a very interesting subject.

Here are the facts:

THE FALL OF A NATION....	7 reels
THE WOLF WOMAN.....	5 reels
THE REWARD OF PATIENCE.	5 reels
	17 reels in all

We will not do more than mention the fact that the "Leading Amusement Palace" of a certain town gives this as a full performance.

* * *

DO you know the time given over to this "show"?—170 minutes continuously for 17 reels—10 minutes to each 1000 feet. We cannot understand how a sane manager can allow it—but here is a man who says he runs the "Leading Amusement Palace" of his town and he takes big space in the local newspaper to tell about it.

* * *

THE pictures in the film are fine—the prints probably new—the admission prices are proper—the equipment we assume is the best obtainable, but——

1. Can the operator make good?
2. Can the pictures make good with the patrons?

There are other houses which do the same thing. In each case the operator is working under compulsion, though if he is honest with his employer he puts up an active objection to the practice. The above show (?) instead of taking two hours and fifty minutes to run off should take four hours and fifteen minutes.

WHAT is the effect upon the patrons who attend a house running pictures in this way? The main thing is that there are at least one hundred per cent more kicks registered about the house and pictures in general than when the pictures were run slower.

The producer is criticized—wiseacres blame the photographer—but when the kicks are made to the manager he blames the operator, who is no more at fault than the manager's wife.

THE patrons' eyes bother them—the oculist says "I always knew that 'movies' were a curse to the people"—yet the man to blame for the curse is the theatre owner who is trying to make a living by promoting a

Difference Between the Fort Wayne Direct Current Compensarc and the Compensarc Made by the General Electric Company—One Machine Operates as a Motor, Taking Its Current from the A. C. Supply Lines and the Other Is Used with Alternating Current and Generating D. C. Current

THE device to be illustrated this week is what is known as the Fort Wayne Direct Current Compensarc. Do not confuse this as so many operators do with the "Compensarc" manufactured by this branch of the General Electric Company, known as type A. The similarity of names has caused many operators to confuse the two, but the type A, was and is an A.C. Compensarc, while the one accompanying this article is a D.C. Compensarc and consists of two machines united together on the same shaft.

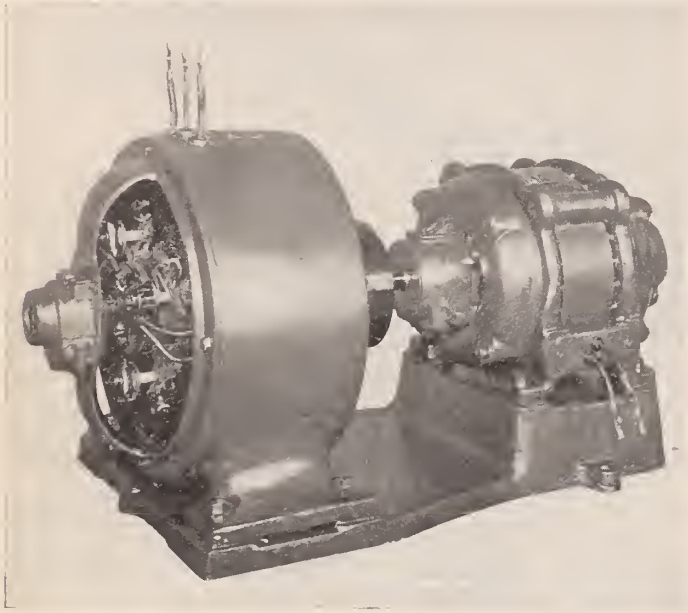

Plate I.

One machine operates as a motor, taking its current from the A.C. supply lines, and driving the other machine as a generator to furnish current at the lamp. A combination of machines such as this is generally called motor-generator sets, and though the Fort Wayne Direct Current Compensarc for a 50 volt circuit is a motor generator set, the 115 and 230 volt sets are not, since the electrical connections between the machines are different from those in a true motor-generator set. I do not believe it necessary to show the windings for the two sets since an operator will seldom if ever be called upon to use anything over the 230 volt set.

Plate 1 shows the Compensarc itself, and you will note that the frames of the two machines are bolted together making it unnecessary to have a specially constructed base for mounting, and since there are no belts, gears, etc., needed the machine can be installed in the operating room or a room adjoining where it will be out of the way.

Fig. 1 shows a wiring diagram for the connecting of a one lamp 50 ampere set, for either single phase, two phase or three phase. While Fig. 2 is the wiring diagram for a set designed to operate two lamps alternately, this drawing also shows the connections for single, double or three phase. A careful study of these drawings will enable the operator to keep things running in first-class shape and if the wiring is of sufficient size and the carbons have the correct polarity, that is, the upper positive and the lower negative, there is no reason why the operator should not be able to do so.

Bolted to the frames of the machines are the bearing flanges which hold the shaft bearings for the shaft, and the brushes which fit on the commutators and carry the current to the armatures. The bearings have a metal lining of special construction which is self-centering, and are supplied with oil by oil rings which rest upon the rotating shaft and turning with it carry oil from the large oil well, located in the bearing flange just below the bearing, up to the top of the shaft.

Both bearings have an oil gauge which enables the operator to see at all times the exact amount of oil in the oil wells; a little cover is also placed over the top of the bearing so that the operator can also see if the oil rings are working properly and giving proper lubrication to the machine.

The armatures of the motor and generator are both mounted on the same shaft, and each has its own commutator. The brush yoke, carrying the brushes, is mounted on the bearing flange and bearing against the rotating commutator completes the circuit between the armature and the line.

The revolving fan, which is mounted on the shaft between the two machines, and which revolves with the shaft setting up a current of air that keeps the machines cool is surrounded by a metal guard; this guard being perforated to allow of sufficient ventilation, and also protecting the operator from any injury that might result from his coming into accidental contact with it which might happen were it not so guarded.

Care should be taken to install the Compensarc in a dry, well ventilated place; a place as free from dirt and dust as possible, for it is dirt that causes the most trouble with any machine, and it is just as easy to keep your apparatus clean as it is to allow it to become so badly caked with dirt that you have to spend hours in getting it in condition again.

The operation of the Compensarc is as follows: See that your carbons are separated; taking for granted that your fuses and connections are O. K., then throw in the main switch, when the armature will start to rotate. Then move the lever of the starting box to the right, slowly, as the machine speeds up, until it reaches the last contact point, when it will be caught and held by the cut-out magnet.

When the machine has reached the limit of speed and is operating properly, you may adjust the voltage by moving the knob on the field rheostat, so as to give about 90 volts at no-load at the generator and approximately 55 volts, which is the required voltage at the arc when carrying the rated current.

THE LIME STREET PICTURE HOUSE IS LOCATED IN ONE OF THE BUSIEST STREETS OF LIVERPOOL, ENGLAND

THE rapid advance of motion pictures in England and their permanent establishment as the entertainment for all classes of the British community is notably exemplified by the Lime Street Picture House, Liverpool. When its facade replaced a number of stores it added distinction to the architectural beauty of the street on which it stands.

The Lime Street Picture House is finished in glazed terra cotta. Its massive Georgian frontage is pleasingly relieved by the handsome ornamental and wrought iron and glass awning, which affords ample shelter to the patrons entering or leaving during bad weather.

The entrance doors are of attractive design in Indiana oak and polished plate glass. They have attractive grip handles, and the bottom panels are protected by plates of oxidized silver. The floor of the entrance hall is in black and white marble, laid in diagonal squares. The walls are exceptionally beautiful, being panelled in gray and green Sicilian marble, with dark green marble base. The ceiling is in fibrous plaster, tastefully decorated.

The auditorium conveys an immediate impression of luxurious comfort and artistic refinement. Perfect taste characterizes every detail and lavish expenditure, added to practical experience, have undoubtedly produced magnificent results. The walls are panelled in oak, and the heavy oak doors protect the area from draughts. The color scheme of the furnishings is saxe-blue. The carpets, seats, curtains and walls are all in perfect harmony.

The stairs leading to the dress circle are of marble mosaic, flanked by an elegant tiled dado, with heavy silver-plated rails. The circle is magnificently carpeted and is furnished with plush tip-up chairs of unusually comfortable proportions. An imposing lounge, furnished in most alluring fashioin, enttices the patrons to afternoon tea and provides an ideal rendezvous. The treatment of the curved ceiling and the panelled walls offers a fine example of the decorator's art, and presents an artistic combination of cream and gold.

The sight lines have been carefully considered, and the various slopes on the floor of the orchestra and the circle insure perfect vision for thc occupant of every chair. Ample exits are arranged —two at the entrance and two at the picture end of both the orchestra and circle level, and all are fireproof. The operator's booth is constructed outside the auditorium and is of fireproof material.

The comfort of the patrons has been considered in every way. Fresh air is drawn from the outside and is first filtered and warmed before being dispersed throughout the auditorium. The vitiated air is extracted by electrically driven exhaust fans. The lighting is the Eye-rest or indirect system, by means of which the theatre is illuminated, and yet no lights are in view, thus giving a restful effect that cannot fail to be appreciated.

The theatre seats 750 on the main floor and 350 in the balcony. The length of throw is ninety feet. The house is located in the business district.

BLAKELY RETURNS TO HOME OFFICE WITH MANY ORDERS FOR ENTERPRISE

S. B. BLAKELY, representative of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, who has been traveling through the Northwest and Western states, returned to the factory this week with many order for Motiographs. Mr. Blakely states that he could have mailed his orders, but he was fearful that the factory would not give the orders the attention he wanted his customers to have in regard to delivering machines to them at an early date, hence his trip to the factory.

He reports the exhibitors are very well satisfied with Fall business, especially after the extremely warm weather of the Summer.

THE HORTING AUTOMATIC STOP, MOTOR DRIVEN FILM REWINDER

THE rewinder, illustrated, called the Horting Automatic Stop, Motor Driven Film Rewinder, was devised to assure absolute safety in the winding and rewinding of motion picture films.

It is the only machine approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters that entirely encloses the film when rewinding. This machine is driven by an enclosed Westinghouse motor, selected as the best adapted for the work both from principle of operation and construction. The cost of operation is said to be less than five cents per day, based on a twelve-hour performance.

As shown by the illustration this rewinder is very simple. It is supported by two uprights, which in turn rest upon an iron base, giving proper rigidity without undue weight. There are two magazines, one larger than the other. Each is a separate enclosed compartment, with a cast aluminum cover or protector designed to conform to the shape of the reels. The larger magazine is used for the reels during rewinding; the smaller one contains the operating mechanism.

The machine will take reels of 2,500 feet or less of any make, and will operate only when the magazine covers are closed, unless set for examination or inspection of film. This feature makes it fool-proof and reduces the danger of any explosion due to the carelessness of the operator. The operator does not have to give the machine any attention whatever after once starting the mechanism, for at the end of the film the machine will automatically stop and the operator can then remove it from the rewinder and place it in the vault.

The Rewinder Shown Open and Closed

Another feature of this machine is the automatic stop should the film break during rewinding; this action is positive, for should the film break while the machine is in operation the rewinder will automatically stop at the point where the break occurred and allow the operator to make his splice, after which it will proceed to rewind the balance of film on the reel .

Operators and owners are often annoyed by the presence of rain on the screen, which is caused by dust and particles of dirt which collect on the face of the film during rewinding, when the rewinding is done in the ordinary way. As the Horting rewinder winds the film under cover, perfect pictures are assured, as no dust can get on the film. It has another advantage in that it does away with unnecessary mutilation or cutting of films, as the perfect easc with which it operates prevents tears and breaks during the process of rewinding.

The device is being made by the Automatic Film Rewinding Company, Incorporated, Harrisburg, Pa., and should merit the careful examination of exhibitors who are looking for something "worth while."

LOSES LOWER LOOP ON EDISON MACHINE

R. E. Johnson, Burton, Ohio, writes: We have an old exhibition model Edison machine and experience a great deal of trouble through losing the lower loop. We have tried everything; putting on new sprockets and guards, and are running with the least possible tension at the take up. Could you suggest anything that would stop this trouble. I also want to say that I made a shutter after the pattern which you published in the NEWS a few weeks ago; the one with the curved blade, and cut it down to use as an inside shutter on our machine and it is giving excellent results.

Answer.—The first thing that came to my mind when I read your letter wherein you said you tried everything and could I suggest a remedy, was to advise you to purchase a new machine, but I knew that is not the answer you want. You will admit though, that it is "cruelty to animals" to use a machine that has been antedated several times by later models which have many improvements over the model you are using. I would suggest that you examine the film as it passes into the lower magazine to see if it is passing perfectly straight.

A side pull, caused by your not setting the mechanism in perfect alignment with the lower magazine sometimes causes the trouble you complain of; again, it might be due to your not having your idler roller close enough to the lower sprocket. Adjust this so that the teeth of the sprocket are covered equally on each side of the sprocket by the groove in the idler roller and see if this does not effect a remedy. I am glad to know that the shutter of Hosford's is giving such excellent results, and am expecting to have other ideas from him that will help along the good work that the operators throughout the country are trying to accomplish.

Those who are interested in the above-mentioned shutter can obtain full information regarding it by consulting the Projection Department of the September 2, issue of the NEWS.

BRYSON IMPORTS CONDENSERS

THE Northwestern Picture Equipment Company, Minneapolis, Minn., of which J. V. Bryson, popularly known as "Jimmie" is the president, are filling orders for their Meniscus-Bi-Convex condensers which they import from the Jena (France) glass works, the finest and purest white glass condensers made. The use of this style of condenser reduces the lighting bills to a considerable degree and also gives greater illumination of the picture on the screen.

To prevent condenser breakage this company also has a new type of condenser mount that can be installed upon any make of machine, and when we consider that for a long time it has been thought impossible to stop condenser breakage this device should make a strong appeal to the exhibitor who has suffered long and patiently, especially in view of the fact that with broken condensers it is not possible to obtain perfect projection. The scarcity of imported condensers has caused a number of exhibitors to use broken condensers in their projection machines until they fell out, caused by their becoming badly splintered.

BADLY WORN INTERMITTENT

E. B. Townsend, Opelika, Ala., writes: I have recently taken charge of two Powers' 6A machines and in both the film makes excessive noise. The cam and intermittent shafts are in line and there is no lost motion to amount to anything. The intermittent sprockets are worn considerably. Do you think this is causing the trouble? Would like to have you answer through the department, stating a remedy for the above trouble.

Answer.—If, as you say the cam and intermittent shafts are in alignment, and there is no lost motion in your machine the trouble you complain of is no doubt due to the worn condition of the intermittent sprocket. Take a small magnifying glass and examine the teeth of the sprockets to see that they are not undercut. If they are there is only one remedy, and that is to put in new sprockets at once, for in addition to the noise which is an annoyance to you and your patrons, you are doing an injustice to the film that is placed in your care.

A badly worn intermittent will cause the film to become badly stretched, and will if allowed to continue tear through the sprocket holes or perforations of the film thereby making it of no further use to the exchange. It is very important that you have the proper tension on the film while it is being run through the machine, as it is the tension that causes a sprocket to become undercut. There are cases where an intermittent sprocket has been in use for as much as seven years, and still in working condition, but I am not informed as to how many hours a day the intermittent was made to work.

I believe that with the "grind" exhibitors are now giving to projecting machines it is an injustice to the machine manufacturer to allow the "heart" of the machine, the intermittent movement, to become so badly worn that the perfection of the projection is lessened. An intermittent movement that has done constant duty for from three to six months, according to the condition of the sprocket at this time, should be changed and a new one installed. Of course, there are times when one sprocket for some reason or other will give longer service under the same conditions than another, but it is a pretty safe bet that six months constant use will cause wear on the intermittent that will not allow of "steady as a rock" projection.

SUPPLY HOUSES IN PHILADELPHIA PLACE MANY EQUIPMENT ORDERS

THE crisp, autumn days which are brisking up business for the theatres naturally show a reflex in the supply houses which are filling many new orders.

Lewis M. Swaab, 1327 Vine street, Philadelphia, has recently supplied to the U. S. Battleship Illinois a 6-B Powers complete with motor attachment; to W. H. Heffly, Duncannon, Pa., a motor drive for a Simplex; to Lees and Van Dyke, Waylusing, Bradford County, Pa., a 6-B Powers complete with motor, and to F. J. Meyers, the Opera House, West Chester, Pa., two motor drives for 6-A machines.

The Great Northern theatre, Philadelphia, under the direction of the Stanley Company, took two Callie ticket choppers, one Mistrum Dis. stereopticon and other equipment.

Outside of Pennsylvania the Empire theatre, Wallace, W. Va., took one Powers 6-A, and H. K. Shoemaker, Swedesboro, N. J., one Simplex complete with motor and a number of brass photo frames.

The Calehuff Supply Company, now at 1301 Race street, Philadelphia, finding their present quarters inadequate, will move about November 1 to 1233 Vine street.

The first floor and basement of this building, which belongs to Benjamin Alexander, are being thoroughly overhauled to meet the needs of the supply company, which has outgrown its old home.

With the advent of the Calehuff Company in the heart of Philadelphia filmland, new lines will be acquired and old ones will be expanded.

"ELECTRIC SUNLIGHT" IS BOOKLET ISSUED BY ELECTRIC PRODUCTS COMPANY

THIS department is in receipt of a little booklet issued by the Electric Products Company, Cleveland, Ohio, entitled "Electric Sunlight." This booklet in addition to its containing much information also sets forth the advantages of the use of their "Rexolux," a vertical type of motor-generator for use in motion picture theatres. This booklet will be sent to any exhibitor upon request to the above named company.

PHILADELPHIA LOCAL NO. 307 WILL HAVE ITS QUARTERS MADE OVER BY NOVEMBER

PHILADELPHIA Local 307, I. A. T. S. E., bids fair to be puffed up with pride by November, by which date the alterations in its headquarters are expected to be completed. No. 307 meets upstairs at 1233 Vine street, the lower floor of which is to be the new home of the Calehuff Company. The latter are showing every courtesy to the local, even helping with the improvements. A new staircase will be put in, the club rooms enlarged and other comforts provided to make this home for the operator a cozy place when off duty. It is hoped to have the rooms in readiness by the nomination meeting, when the officers for the ensuing year will be considered, the election taking place two weeks later. A hot contest for most of the officers is expected.

When the renovation of headquarters is an accomplished fact, No. 307 expects to formulate plans for another big ball to take place some time during the winter.

OFFICES OF THE I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. OF THE U. S. AND C.

IN answer to the many queries received by me asking for the address of the headquarters of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Motion Picture Operators of the United States and Canada, I am answering the question through the columns of this department.

The offices of the I. A. are located at 107 West 46th street, New York City, and are in charge of Brothers Martin H. Higgins, assistant international president, and Frank G. Lemaster, general organizer, and manager of the "I. A. Journal." Any communications received by them will be given their immediate attention, and they will be glad to inform prospective members of the Alliance to the best of their ability concerning such questions as may be asked them regarding the formation of new locals and other matters.

OPERATORS' UNION IN OMAHA HELPS CELEBRATE LABOR DAY PARADE WITH FLOAT

THE motion picture operators' union had a float, a band and a number of men and children in the Labor Day Parade at Omaha. The Empress, Omaha's biggest motion picture theatre, recently gave in after a fight lasting years, and is now employing a union operator and showing the "Safety First" seal on the screen. Every time it appears, union men in the audience applaud.

Color Photography

INTERFERENCE methods, such as Lippman's process would hardly prove adaptable to cinematography since the exposure necessary to produce color photographs by interference is very long (from 3 to 20 minutes in bright sunlight). Our description of the process and the diagram, Fig. 10, will, however, prove of value to all students of light and color, as it shows the way in which the iridescent colors seen in soap bubbles, some varieties of shells, and in a drop of oil floating on water are produced.

Following Lippman's Interference process of natural color photography came the invention, by Frederick E. Ives of Philadelphia, of the Photochromoscope or "Kromskop," which presented natural color photographs in an attractive form and did much toward popularizing the art of three-color photography.

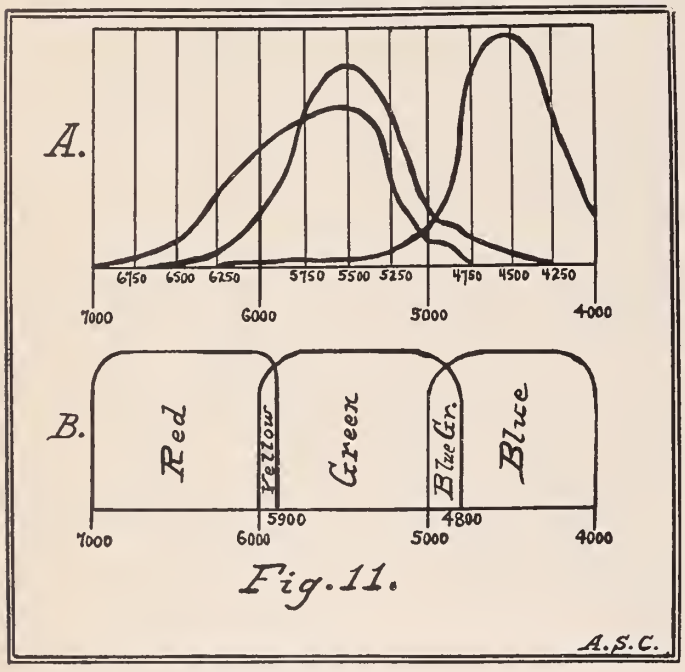

Fig. 11.

A.S.C.

The Ives Kromskop

Ives' system was an additive one. Three negatives were made (on color sensitive plates of course), through filters which recorded the redness, greenness and blueness, respectively, of the objects photographed. In other words—the negative recording the red in the object photographed was made through a filter transmitting the red and absorbing the other colors (a red glass essentially), the green record negative was taken through a filter transmitting green (a green glass) and the blue record negative was taken through a filter transmitting blue. Although we assume, for the sake of simplicity, color filters of colored glass; in practice the filters may be glass coated with correctly colored gelatine; transparent films of colored gelatine; or glass cells containing colored dye solutions. The latter form of filter is not employed in color cinematography.

Having taken and developed the red, green and blue sensation negatives, black and white positive transparencies (similar to lantern-slides) were next made. The positive from the red filter negative being then bound up in contact with a red glass, the green positive with a green glass and the blue positive with a blue glass, the three transparencies were next placed in the Kromskop or viewing apparatus.

How the Kromskop Works

Briefly described the Kromskop was an L shaped box having 3 openings (two on the top and 1 at one end) at which the three transparencies were placed. Light from outside the box could shine through the two transparencies at the top, while light was reflected through the transparency mounted at the end of the box by a mirror mounted outside at an angle of 45 degrees. Within the box were two colored glasses (also set at an angle of 45 degrees) which served as reflecting mirrors, and combined the colored images of the three transparencies on a line with the viewing lens at the front of the Kromskop.

Diagrams showing the actual design of the Kromskop may be seen in almost any work on color photography, and we recommend that all readers familiarize themselves with the workings of this apparatus. It does not require any great mechanical skill to construct a Kromskop, and such an instrument will prove valuable to the experimenter or investigator in color photography.

The effect of natural colors seen in the transparencies combined in the Kromskop is produced by illuminating the red, green and blue sensation positives with light of their respective colors. This is, therefore, an additive process and the same natural colored result could be secured by projecting the red, green and blue transparencies (each combined with its colored glass or projecting filter), over one another, upon a screen by means of three lanters.

As the majority of systems, proposed and practised to date, of producing motion pictures in natural colors are additive processes, it will be well for us to go into the technique of three-color photography slightly before considering the actual details of the various methods by which cinematographic projection in the colors of nature is attempted.

In the first place negative film stock sensitive to all visible colors will be required. We need not go into the details of color sensitizing here as the preparation of negative stock sensitive to the red, and all other regions of the spectrum has been dwelt upon in the Camera Department in our former article "Color Sensitive Film," which appeared in the NEWS of August 12, 1916.

Additive Taking Filters

Our next consideration will be the taking filters, through which the red, green and blue sensation negatives are secured, and very important, indeed, is the selection or preparation of these filters, as on the ability or disability of these screens to satisfactorily separate and record the fundamental color sensations rests the success or failure of a color process.

As was shown by Clerk-Maxwell with his color sensation curves (Fig. 9) all colors are produced by admixture of three primaries, red, green and blue-violet. Now while it might seem and doubtless is believed by many that most any glass or gelatine which appears red, green or blue in color will prove suitable for making filters for a three-color photographic process, it should be appreciated by all readers of the preceding installments of this article, that in order to successfully reproduce natural colors the taking screens must be prepared with regard for the laws of color vision as expressed by the Maxwell curves.

In preparing a set of tricolor filters, it would not be found feasible to use as a basis for calculation the original Maxwell curves (as shown in Fig. 9), because these curves were drawn up by Clerk-Maxwell from observations made with a prism spectroscope and therefore represent the color distribution of the prismatic spectrum.

The Tricolor Curves

To ascertain the manner in which the fundamental color sensations combine to produce a normal spectrum, it is therefore necessory to reconstruct Maxwell's sensation curves on a wave-length scale. The reconstructed color sensation curves are shown at A, Fig. 11, and by comparing them with the original Maxwell curves, Fig. 9, it will be seen that their form is almost entirely reversed. The red sensation curve, which was the highest in Fig. 9, and occupied by a narrow space, is now seen to be considerably more spread out, while its height (or intensity) is consequently lowered. The green curve has undergone a like change, but in a lesser degree, while the blue curve, which was the lowest and most spread out in Maxwell's diagram (prismatic spectrum), is now seen to be the highest, but occupies a much narrower space than the blue sensation curve in Fig. 9. The reason for the change, in intensity and area, of these curves when reconstructed on a wave-length scale will be readily understood by referring back to the comparison of the diffraction grating spectrum with the prismatic spectrum, which appeared in an earlier chapter of "Color Photography" (September 23, page 1917).

The Filter Transmissions

A satisfactory set of filters for three-color photography may be constructed from these sensation curves (A, Fig. 11). Their absorption curves should terminate abruptly, and their transmissions will somewhat resemble the diagram B, Fig. 11. As is shown by B, Fig. 11, the red filter transmits from wave-length 7,000 to 5,900. The green filter transmits from wave-length 6,000 to 4,800, while the blue-violet filter transmits from w. l. 5,000 to w. l. 4,000. It will be noticed that yellow is produced by an overlap in the red and green filters, while bluish green is produced by an overlap in the green and blue-violet filters. The exact position and extent of the overlaps between the red and green filters and between the green and blue-violet filters will vary slightly with filters adjusted to different emulsions, and filters adjusted to one make of film or plate should not be used promiscuously with other emulsions if accurate results are desired.

A study of B, Fig. 11, shows that the entire spectrum, with no gaps, is transmitted by a set of filters prepared as there illustrated. It is, therefore, apparent that results secured through such filters will, when suitably recombined (by additive projection or

Music and the Picture

Edited by Ernst Luz

This department is maintained for the exhibitor's assistance with a view of suggesting proper musical illustrations for current photo plays. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be pleased to help solve any difficulties the exhibitors may have with their musical programs. All communications should be addressed to the Music and the Picture Department.

A Convincing Brief Held for the Pipe Organ

Emotions of the Audience Are Awakened by the Instrument to Such an Extent That People Can Almost Feel Themselves in the Picture—Under Skilled Hands It Can Pretty Nearly Make the Picture Talk—Organist Can Modulate Every Tone to Suit Action on the Screen

A TENSE dramatic situation appears on the screen, the audience sits silently, their emotions blending with the situation. The musician starts the strain of a popular song. Almost instantly the audience changes its attentiveness, its mind has been detracted from the play and the scene has been spoiled. This is an everyday occurrence in many houses, and it is certainly not picture playing. In a dramatic scene artistic interpretation dictates that the music should be subordinate to the play, the music should follow each scene and blend with it. It should assist in raising the emotions of the audience, but should under no circumstances predominate the play.

Now we come to a very important question, what instrument is capable of giving this artistic interpretation to a picture. Is it the piano alone? Emphatically no. Well then is it the orchestra? Again no, because with printed scores the action of a picture cannot be followed correctly unless the score was especially composed for that one picture. The action of a picture may be very dramatic, but at that particular moment your printed score may be just the opposite. Printed scores can fill some situations, but not all.

What is this instrument that can do all these things as they should be done; that when a love scene appears on the screen, your emotions are awakened to such an extent that you can almost feel yourself in the picture; that when the situation appears highly dramatic, the gradual increasing volume of tone holds you tense; then comes the climax of the picture and with it the beautiful resonant full chord tones. What is this wonderful instrument? I have no doubt, but that the majority of exhibitors who are reading this article have already in their mind answered this question.

Pipe Organ Sways Emotions

Of course, its the pipe organ, that wonderful full toned instrument which can sway the emotions of everybody. It is unquestionably the appropriate instrument as an accompaniment to pictures. The organ under skilled hands can almost make the picture talk. Every essential detail can be brought out to perfection. The organist can modulate his organ tones to the action of the picture the same as the singer modulates the voice to the requirements of the song being sung. The possibilities of the pipe organ are exceptional. Where there is a church scene, the organ fits in admirably. Where there is a love scene, the beautiful soft tones of the organ keeps the audience enthralled with emotion. In dramatic scenes, the audience can be brought up to its feet with the gradual increasing volume of tone as produced with an organ.

Many exhibitors are losing money, because they do not seem to understand the music question as it should be today with the improved quality of pictures shown. They install a piano in their theatre and expect that comparative insignificant instrument to bring out a feature picture properly. Even if the piano is well played, the possibilities of the instrument are too small. The exhibitor will claim that business does not warrant him putting in anything more than a piano, but still his patrons will find fault and his audience grow smaller daily.

As the quality of the pictures improve, so must the music improve likewise. Many exhibitors seem to think that all they have to do is to put on a good picture and let the music take care of itself, because their patrons only come to see good pictures. Well Mr. Exhibitor, let me tell you that this is all wrong. From my own experience I know that the moving picture patrons are now educated up to such a point that you cannot fool them with inferior music. They want the best, and the best is the cheapest in the end. With an organ the exhibitor is certain to improve his music, because as a general rule the pipe organist is a thorough musician and has the ability to supply appropriate music.

Combination of Pipe Organ and Orchestra

Many of the larger theatres use pipe organ and orchestra, and that makes a fine combination, but how many exhibitors can afford this? For the exhibitor who has the medium sized house, and whose business does not warrant him keeping an orchestra, the pipe organ is the ideal instrument for him. He can afford one because they come in all sizes and prices. There is no excuse for the exhibitor to supply his patrons with inferior music. And those exhibitors who think otherwise, will eventually realize their mistakes. So get together you exhibitors and give your patrons the best there is in the music line. It is a paying investment.

From my own experience as picture organist, and the knowledge of the up-to-date methods of successful exhibitors, I have come to the conclusion that no matter how small or large a theatre, the pipe organ is the ideal instrument capable of giving correct artistic interpretation to a picture.

Editors Note: The above contribution by Sidney Steinheimer, organist and composer, requires little editorial comment.

There is little doubt but what the future will see every picture theatre equipped with a pipe organ or similar instrument. It has been our contention that such an instrument should be part of the equipment when the theatre is built, classed in like importance to the screen. When this is charged to construction it adds prestige to the theatre, and the expense should be classed in like manner as we would the putting up of a cheap or expensive front to a theatre.

Many exhibitors do not consider their electric signs, which in many instances are a tremendous expense, a luxury but a business getter. Necessary musical construction in the theatre interior is no different, but adds greatly to the importance and advertising value of the electric sign that costs real money on the outside.

In Mr. Steinheimer's eulogy of the pipe organ as the means for better picture music, he also has injected many beautiful ideas of how an organist should handle the instrument when playing pictures. He has, however, done this in too terse a manner. We would therefore be grateful to him for a few articles, more concise, on how to obtain emotional or dramatic effects on the pipe organ.

Music Plot for "The Light That Failed"

Pathe Gold Rooster Feature By ERNST LUZ Maximum Projection Time, 70 Minutes

This plot is adapted so as to make it possible for the Pianist, One Man Orchestra Player, Organist or Orchestra Leader to make some prior preparation for playing the picture. The numbers suggested do not need to be used, similar numbers, or numbers suggested by "notes," will do as well. It is intended that no unnecessary expense be added for the exhibitor or musician.

Note.—In music plots each reel of film is divided into 10 units of time, each unit denoted by one X representing about 1½ minutes. Consequently when a number is designated by XX it plays about 3 minutes, XXXX about 6 minutes, etc. When no X appears after musical description it means that the number is very short and does not play a minute or more. When cues to stop numbers are in quotation, "——," it means that the Cue is reading matter or sub-title. All other cues are action on screen. All segues should be made quietly and clean. When quick segues or abrupt stops are necessary it will be mentioned in Cues or Notes. When the time of each 1,000 ft. of film is less than 15 minutes there will appear less than 10 X's in each reel. To get the correct time of projection for each reel, multiply the number of X's appearing in each reel by 1½.

Effect Notes.—During Nos. 3 and 27 light battle effects are required. During No. 11 single revolver shots are also good.

Music Notes.—This picture affords exceptional opportunities for the rendition of good music and perfect synchronization. The A. B. C. Dramatic Set No. 17, sold by Jos. W. Stern, Music Publishers, No. 102 West 38th Street, New York City, was specially composed and arranged as suggested by this picture. The picture tells a beautiful romance set in true oriental and modern Bohemian color. No. 21, the Swan Song from the Wagner opera "Lohengrin," is pointedly suggested by a title on the screen and the picture affords an excellent opportunity for playing this number concert style. An excellent arrangement of this is published by Carl Fischer, Cooper Square, New York. No. 1 should be a medium slow number in 2-4 or 4-4, oriental character. No. 2 is a short ad lib suggestion before the battle. No. 3 accompanies agitation and fighting. No. 4 must be a slow number of romantic appeal. Must not be a dramatic number. No. 5 is a slow waltz lento number played very legato. No. 6 should be a light 2-4 or 4-4 number. No. 7 must be a 2-4 oriental dance. No. 8 is similar to 3. No. 9 is similar to 4. No. 10 is similar to 6. No. 11 is similar to 4. No. 12 is similar to 7 but must be played slower. No. 13 is similar to 4. No. 14 must be a very light agitato. Do not play an agitato you have played previously in the picture. No. 15 must be a long slow number of heavy dramatic effect with a positive pathetic appeal. No. 16 must be similar to 5. No. 17 the same as 14. No. 19 the same as 5. No. 21 should be as suggested in the plot. No. 22 should be similar to 15. No. 23 should be a medium slow number playing about 2½ or 3 minutes, of a light romantic suggestion. No. 24 must be a slow melodious or sweet number with an assured pathetic appeal. No. 25 is similar to 1. No. 26 is similar to 2. No. 27 is similar to 3. No. 28 is similar to 4. When the number suggested for No. 28 is used, it should be played somewhat slower than usual. This picture affords excellent opportunities for the organist.

"The Pride of Estherville" Deserves Its Name

The Grand, Estherville, Iowa, Owned by F. H. Graaf, Is a $75,000 Picture House in a Town of 4,123—The Theatre Seats 1,050 and Is Handsomely Decorated—All Comforts for Patrons Have Been Installed

"THE Pride of Estherville" is the heading on the stationery of the new Grand theatre at Estherville, Iowa, and travelers and exchange men who have had a peep into this theatre declare that this title is not broad enough. It should read—"The Pride of Iowa." In reply to a question put to him by an interested friend as to the class and quality of the house, F. H. Graaf, owner and manager, said: "This house of mine has most picture theatres backed off of the map. It is right up to city style all the way through."

Interior of the Grand Theatre, Estherville, Iowa

Imagine a $75,000 picture theatre in a town with a population of 4,123. Well, Mr. Graaf gave the former figure as the cost of his house and the 1915 population bulletin of Iowa gives the latter figure as the population of Estherville.

The Grand has a seating capacity of 1,050. There are 600 seats on the first floor and 550 in the balcony. These seats are each numbered. They have leather backs and are upholstered. Eight sets of neatly furnished boxes, four on each side of the house, give a very attractive touch. Two broad aisles covered with Brussels carpet give access to the seats on the first floor.

All of the decorating and ornamental plaster work was done by contractors imported especially for this from Minneapolis. The color scheme is gold and white. The ceiling itself is plain and is in marked contrast to the decrations on the wall, which are many, but well placed. The plaster work on the front of the boxes and the balcony is exceptionally attractive.

Indirect Lighting System

The lighting system is of the indirect type. Attractive bowls, painted to harmonize with the gold and white color scheme send out soothing rays of light, with the result that a most delightful effect is ever present. Four large clusters on the ceiling also add to the lighting fixtures of the theatre. Exit lights at the proper places complete this ever-important item.

The projection room might be called an operator's "second heaven," as in addition to being supplied with the very latest equipment, hot and cold water pipes and conveniences have been installed for the comfort of the operator. To quote Mr. Graaf: "It is just like a parlor." Special care has been taken in the construction of this room.

It is twelve feet long, sixteen feet wide and ten feet high, fireproof in every respect. Two Powers 6-B machines, a Hallberg generating set and a good spot light are the most important parts of the equipment.

One feature of the Grand is the large stage available for legitimate productions. This stage, fifty feet by thirty feet in length and width, with a seventy-two feet loft, holds a gold fiber screen.

A person generally forms his impression of a theater when he first enters. Its lobby has a ceiling of white and gold from which are suspended four bowls. The lobby is a combination of marble and tile. The two swinging doors opening into the theatre are finished in art glass, as is that portion of the wall above the door up to the ceiling. A brass rail down the center of the lobby strikes the middle of the box-office and provides a very effective division line. The floor is of different colored tile.

Good Pictures Draw Crowds

Two features are the vacuum cleaner and a $12,000 pipe organ. By means of the former most of the house can be cleaned by one man in about sixty minutes.

Lobby of the Grand Theatre

The question arises as to whether the Grand has to do much advertising. Mr. Graaf has opposition, of course, but he does not let that bother him much. He shows good pictures and his patrons know it. He has a most wonderful house and his patrons know that. Personally, he is a genial and pleasant manager and his patrons are aware of that. So he has crowds * * * and big ones, too. He advertises in all ways common to live theatre owners. His program for the seven days of the week is as follows: Fox, World, Triangle, Metro, V-L-S-E, Pathe and Paramount. He generally has one vaudeville act to fill in.

As to Mr. Graaf himself, it might be said that he just about owns the thriving little town of Estherville. In addition to this $75,000 moving picture house he has established a confectionery store next door that is said not to be equalled in the middle West. Mr. Graaf says that it is the finest store this side of California. If it is anything like his new theatre, he cannot be disputed with safety. This is not all he owns in Estherville. He controls various other businesses there and is a leader in the town.

He is proud of this little $75,000 moving picture theater, is Mr. Graaf, but you can't blame him. If you had put this much money into a theatre in a town the size of Estherville and made a howling success of the theatre you'd be proud, too, and you surely would have a reason to be. Thus you see the "why" of Mr. Graaf's optimistic comments.

THE SEEBURG ORGAN AT THE ROSEWOOD

CHARLES A. SHAMP, organist of the Rosewood theatre, Chicago, is one of the musicians responsible for the dignified position that picture music is assuming. Mr. Shamp gained wide recognition for his ability as a composer and organist before he entered the picture theatre end of the profession. He was amazed to see how rudimentary the music was in the majority of cinema houses and resolved to study the situation carefully with the idea of improving the standard of picture music.

Charles A. Shamp

Mr. Shamp has one of the largest libraries of music owned by any organist. He has this comprehensive collection elaborately indexed, so that he may at once find the exact type of selection he wishes to use. During the run of the feature to be used he makes voluminous notes from which he is readily able to construct a music plot. It is really surprising to hear a music interpretation that follows the action on the screen with such fidelity and mood expression.

Mr. Shamp does not belittle the possibilities of picture playing, as do many artists, but on the other hand, believes that the pictures offer more opportunities and problems to a really creative musician than any other branch of music.

The Rosewood theatre can attribute much of its success to its music feature. By advertising that unusually fine music will always be a feature of the policy of the house many music lovers are induced to visit the theatre, and Mr. Shamp's playing assures their steady patronage.

The Rosewood theatre is equipped with a large Seeburg organ. In the opinion of Mr. Shamp the Seeburg is an instrument ideally suited to picture playing.

NEW NATIONAL THEATRE, JERSEY CITY, SOON TO OPEN

BLUMENTHAL AND HARRING, owners of a chain of theatres, are about to open their new National Theatre in Jersey City. This theatre has a seating capacity of 1,400, and will be equipped throughout with all modern improvements. One of the features of this house is a beautiful lobby, which is covered both inside and out with an elaborate set of display frames which were designed and built by Menger and Ring, 304 West Forty-second street, New York.

Arnold Kornicker, representing Menger and Ring, reports that this contract called for over 450 square feet of Corinthian style frames finished in antique gold.

of the endless variety and adaptability of the Rawson & Evans Interchangeable Letter electric signs. The illustration shows a fifteen line program bulletin used in the Pine Grove Theatre, one of the great Hamburger chain of photoplay houses.

This very striking sign was made by adding additional lines to our regular five-line unit. We will furnish you with one of these attention-compelling signs in any style you want, any size you want, for any purpose you want.

All Rawson & Evans Interchangeable Letter signs are alike in principle. They consist of translucent letters of white glass against a black enameled background. Electric bulbs inside the frame light every letter perfectly. The letters are so easily arranged that any text you want can be set up in a jiffy.

There is no bulb breakage or high current cost. These signs are legible by day as well as by night.

Rawson & Evans signs cost less than any others, but their materials and workmanship are unequalled.

If you are a wide-awake exhibitor, you will want our booklet describing these signs and quoting prices. Sent post-free to any address.

otherwise) reproduce faithfully all colors and intermediate hues of the objects photographed.

Some students of color photography find it hard to realize this, but the results secured by workers possessing accurate knowledge prove that it is easily possible.

The Filter Ratio

When making exposures through a set of tricolor filters, it will be found that the exposure through the red and green filters must be longer than that through the blue filter, and as will probably be inferred by most readers the exposure through the red filter must (with most emulsions) be still more than the exposure through the green filter. The exposure ratio must be so regulated (by test exposures) that when a gray-colored object is photographed it will be represented by an equally dense deposit in all three negatives.

In still photography this result can be easily attained by giving varying exposures through the three filters, but in cinematography, where the film is passing through the camera at a rapid rate and each image is exposed for an equal period, other means must be adopted for balancing the exposures. This may be accomplished by using film strongly sensitive to the rays transmitted by the red and green filters, or by preparing the taking filters with dyes specially selected for their luminosity. It is known to all experts in color photography that some dyes (or dye combinations) having like absorptions differ in their luminosity, or the readiness with which they will transmit light. It will be obvious, therefore, that the preparation of filters and the sensitizing of panchromatic film stock for use in color cinematography requires scientific knowledge possessed by very few motion picture experts (so called) at the present time.

Additive Projecting Filters

Now as to the viewing or projecting filters. It would seem that the filters used in securing the red, green and blue sensation negatives should also prove suitable for projecting or viewing filters when combining the positive transparencies by triple projection or in a viewing apparatus. In practice it is found, however, that the taking filters are not eminently suitable for use in projecting (or viewing) the positive records. The reason is that they are too absorptive of light due to the fact (shown in Fig. 11) that each of these filters is composed of more than one color, and therefore light passing through such filters suffers some absorption by each color present in their composition. This would naturally result in a severe dimming down of the illumination of the combined or projected result, so filters of a somewhat different nature are employed when combining or projecting the three transparencies additively.

To produce brilliant results in additive color projection, we must select filters which do not overlap but transmit the primaries, red, green and blue, in abruptly divided or "sharp cut" bands. Thus our red projecting filter should transmit from wavelenth 7,000 to w. l. 6,000, with abrupt termination at 6,000. Our green filter should, likewise, be a true green, transmitting from w. l. 6,000 to w. l. 5,000 and not passing any blue light.

The blue filter should, of course, transmit from w. l. 5,000 to w. l. 4,000, but it will be necessary, for projecting purposes, to select one which is very luminous (capable of transmitting light freely) as the average blue filter is very absorptive of blue light. This is due to the absorption bands in the blue spectral region being much more gradual than the absorption bands in the red region, the latter terminating abruptly.

As we have now surveyed the most important scientific points attaching to additive methods of color synthesis, we shall see, in our next installment, how the proposition of photographing and projecting natural color cinematograph pictures (by additive methods) has been attacked by various inventors.

ANOTHER LEGITIMATE THEATRE GOES INTO PICTURES

The opera house at New Westminster, B. C., has entered the ranks of moving pictures, having been opened recently as such by William Hanscher, former manager of the Royal theatre in that city. Vaudeville and legitimate attractions are also played at times.

THE REGENT, DETROIT'S NEWEST AND LARGEST PICTURE THEATRE, IS NOW OPEN

Special to Motion Picture News.

Detroit, Mich., October, 14.

DETROIT'S newest and largest motion picture theatre, The Regent, at Woodward avenue and the Grand Boulevard, opened to a private audience on Monday evening, September 8 and the next day to the public. A Metro drama "God's Half Acre" was the opening attraction. The Regent seats about 3,600 and makes the fifth in a string advantageously located theatres financed and controlled by William F. Klatt, the other four being the Rosedale, Vendome, Gratiot and Jewell.

The Regent house manager is Charles W. Porter, formerly at the Duplex and Miles, while the booking is in charge of Charles A. McVicker, who is general director of all the Klatt houses. There is a twenty-piece orchestra in charge of Ivan Rudisill and a large Kimball pipe organ. The Regent is strictly fireproof and is positively the largest motion picture playhouse in Detroit.

It has a washed air system, with more than the usual space between seats and frequent exits. It is located in a theatre-going district. Expert decorators have made the interior a delight to the eye, with a color scheme of gray, ivory, blue and gold, and an especially handsome stage setting.

THEATRE IN TOWN OF TWO THOUSAND CLEARS $200 ON "PEGGY"

A. C. Bradley, of Belzoni, Mississippi, a little town of 2,000 inhabitants, is daily demonstrating that the "store show" is a thing of the past, even for the littlest towns.

On September 14 Mr. Bradley opened the Crescent theatre, a 500 seat house, with Billy Burke in "Peggy" as the feature. It was one of the biggest events in the town in years, and in the surrounding country as well, which is demonstrated by the fact that Mr. Bradley cleared close to $200 with the picture, which he ran at 10 and 20 cents.

The Crescent theatre was built at a cost of $12,000, and is the last word in moving picture houses. There are 150 seats in the rear of the theatre which can be reserved for a special feature. Although open only a few weeks, Mr. Bradley has already played "The Battle Cry of Peace" to splendid houses. He is booking all the big features in order, and will shortly play "Where Are My Children?" and Anna Pavlowa in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," two Universal specials.

Success has certainly attended Mr. Bradley's efforts to give his little town a good picture show, and is proven by splendid patronage nightly. Mr. Bradley has no opposition, and, from the looks of things, he won't have any for some time to come.

public nuisance in the form of a theatre which does the business more harm than it could ever possibly do him good.

* * *

WHEN we sift it down, it's all because of a desire to put on more pictures than the other fellow, regardless of how they are put on—instead of building up a reputation for his house by showing good pictures as they should be shown in a well rounded program; at a decent speed, with good music, all aimed to please the patron and raise the standard of pictures instead of lowering it, as is being done on illustration.
